PROPERTY OF THE
NEW HAVEN PUBLIC SCHOOLS
NEW HAVEN HIGH SCHOOL

This book is loaned on following conditions:

It will not be marked or defaced.

(The next pupil will appreciate this book if it is clean and in good condition.)

If lost, stolen, or injured it will be paid for by pupil to whom it is loaned.

(The pupil borrowing this book is responsible for its return. Write your name in ink below, to prove property.)

Book No. R11-43

Loaned to:	Room	Date
Ruth Joan Labov	117 A.M.	April 17, 1944

Ruth Joanne Labov

THE NEW HAVEN CITY SCHOOL DISTRICT

ENGLISH DEPARTMENT, NEW HAVEN HIGH SCHOOL

1. Write the information called for below in ink once in the spaces provided.
2. You are responsible for the full cost of this book or for the return of the book to the teacher who lent it.
3. If you mark or otherwise deface this book, you must pay a fine for damages.

BOOK NUMBER R 13-43

Loaned To	Room	Date

The Riverside Literature Series

THE GOLDEN TREASURY

BY

FRANCIS T. PALGRAVE

LATE PROFESSOR OF POETRY IN THE UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD

WITH AN INTRODUCTION, NOTES, READING LISTS AND TOPICS FOR STUDY

BY

MAX J. HERZBERG

PRINCIPAL, WEEQUAHIC HIGH SCHOOL
NEWARK, NEW JERSEY

HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY

BOSTON · NEW YORK · CHICAGO · DALLAS
SAN FRANCISCO

The Riverside Press Cambridge

COPYRIGHT, 1927
BY HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY

ALL RIGHTS RESERVED

The Riverside Press
CAMBRIDGE · MASSACHUSETTS
PRINTED IN THE U.S.A.

PREFACE

PALGRAVE furnished with his collection, THE GOLDEN TREASURY, a considerable number of notes — bibliographical, linguistic, and interpretative. He also provided a set of historical introductions, one for each book. Practically all of this material has been retained in the present edition.

In addition, however, the teacher will find here much new material; and I trust that it will prove to be such as is needed in the classroom or for study at home. I have conceived the teacher's function as being to furnish the vital spark, and the vital spark is more readily kindled, I believe, when all routine work — such as accompanies even the study of poetry — has been made as easy as possible. All the material here provided has been included solely with the idea of saving the teacher's time and energy; and wherever use of it is made, I hope that it will be found helpful in creating backgrounds, in supplying necessary facts, in stimulating thought, and in inciting the pupil to further reading of poetry.

I may perhaps be allowed to state here my personal conviction that the continued study of a poem, the careful analysis of its thought and language, are not necessarily deadeners of poetic appreciation. It all depends on how it is done; and if this analysis is properly made it adds to and does not detract from the enjoyment of a fine poem. A quick reading may, indeed, give a poignant pleasure; but intelligent students of poetry, like intelligent students of music, will not be content with this pleasure, but will seek to give it deep, intellectual foundations. Both Palgrave and his friend Tennyson obviously enjoyed the fruits of scholarship as well as of pure poetry.

To my wife I wish to extend my thanks for her help in connection with the preparation of this edition.

M. J. H.

CONTENTS

INTRODUCTION

The Enjoyment of Poetry 1
The Technique of Verse 6
A Note on Francis Turner Palgrave 10
THE GOLDEN TREASURY as an Anthology 12

THE GOLDEN TREASURY

Book First 15
Book Second 69
Book Third 148
Book Fourth 214

APPENDIX

Notes, Study Suggestions, and Interpretations 369
A Brief Reading List for Teachers 401
Summaries of English Literary History 402
Poets of THE GOLDEN TREASURY 407
Exercises Based on THE GOLDEN TREASURY 425
Words for Study 430
Questions on the Four Books of THE GOLDEN TREASURY and on its Chief Authors 435
Recent College Entrance Examinations — Questions that Deal with Poems in THE GOLDEN TREASURY 443
INDEX OF AUTHORS 451
INDEX OF TITLES 455
INDEX OF FIRST LINES 459

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2026

https://archive.org/details/goldentreasury0000fran_t3h9

INTRODUCTION

THE ENJOYMENT OF POETRY

1. RHYTHM UNIVERSAL. Poetry is an instinct as old and as universal as mankind. Go as far back as you please, search the records of any tribe or race even in its savage state, investigate the literature of any people of note, and you will find that the creation and the love of poetry prevail everywhere. The proudest possession of any nation is its heritage of poetry; and the greatest nations are those that have produced the finest poetry.

The reason for this universality of poetry may perhaps be found in one of the essential elements of poetry — rhythm. All that lives beats to rhythm, and poetry is only one of the many expressions of this universal quality of life. The tides and the waves of the sea, the revolutions of the heavenly bodies, the alternation of the seasons, day and night, the pulse and other functions of the human body, all these and much else observe a rhythm that the science of physics has expressed in the idea of every action being accompanied by a reaction. Rhythm is an integral part of our beings. It is inextricably interwoven with our thoughts and feelings. Instinctively, we "keep time."

Rhythm at its purest may, of course, be found in music, and a song at twilight or the brisk march of a military band has power to stir us all. But the laws of rhythm work their will, too, in the fine arts (such as painting and architecture), particularly in the way in which harmony and balance are observed. They may be seen, moreover, in the making of a vase or of a bit of beautiful china, in crocheting and dressmaking, in the construction of furniture and the decoration of a room. Part will be found to correspond to part, color to color, one conventional design to another conventional design, in accordance with a definite rhythm.

2. OTHER ELEMENTS IN POETRY. In poetry rhythm is fundamental, but certain other elements are also essential. Poetry, some one has said, is music made articulate; it is music plus words. Some poetry is so rich in music that the meaning is unimportant — as in the case of some of Poe's or Swinburne's poems. In others, the poet has paid so much attention to the meaning and so little to the music, that the poem lacks beauty. The music of poetry must be preserved at all costs — the beauty of the rhythm, of the flow of sound, of the harmony of the strains.

Poe, who has just been mentioned, framed one of the best definitions of poetry that have ever been given. He said that poetry was "the rhythmic creation of beauty." This definition stresses three important elements: rhythm, beauty, and creation. The last might also be called imagination, for it is imagination that creates. In rhythmic language the poet calls up lovely pictures. On the wings of his fancy he bears the reader to all lands and all climes, penetrates into the heart of man, woman, and child, describes what drama of feeling is being enacted therein, and interprets it for us; he shows the purpose of life and the world in brilliant images and beautiful music. He is a seer — one who glimpses the secrets of the universe and perceives its hidden relations and real unity.

3. Nature of the Poet. A poet is necessarily, therefore, a person somewhat out of the ordinary. Yet at the very start we must understand that in all of us lurks a poet. Those who attain fame by their poetry merely fulfill our hidden desires. They express what we cannot fully express; they convey the beauty that we feel dimly, but to which we are unable to give outward form. When a poem stirs us, it is not so much because the poet has expressed himself as because he has expressed something deep within us: he releases our hopes and fears, our ambition and love and patriotism and reverence.

The poet should consequently be regarded as one who intensifies a mood that all human beings possess. What is the make-up of the good poet? His "brains beat rhythm," as Browning expressed it. He is imaginative, highly sympathetic, and can put himself in the other fellow's place; he can creep underneath his neighbor's skin and know the way he looks at things and how he feels. He has the same power with reference even to non-human creatures. So Keats once said: "If a sparrow come before my window, I take part in its existence, and pick about the gravel." Of some poets we are even ready to believe that they partake of the mysterious life of plants, and can tell us what a flower would say if a flower could talk.

With the power of imagination the poet is able to build; taking elements of different kinds he can construct a new whole. Out of diverse elements he makes a plot; out of traits taken from different people he creates a character. Therefore the Greeks called a poet a "maker" or "doer"; and in German and other languages the term poet is applied also to novelists and dramatists.

A poet is keenly observant, and often his senses are unusually alert, so that into his poems he introduces vivid images of sight, sound, smell, touch, and taste. With the poet's help we can perceive what before we had never noticed; and even scientists have been indebted to the keen powers of observation of poets.

The true poet always has one remarkable gift — the ability to perceive similarities. One thing speaks to him in terms of another. One object immediately evokes in his mind the image of another object. The stars are flowers — "the forget-me-nots of the angels"; or, contrariwise, a woman's eyes are "stars of twilight fair." A cheek is a rose. The wind speaks in whispers. Thunder is a voice — the word of Zeus. The waves dance with glee. The plain rolls beneath our gaze like an ocean. Dewdrops are the gems or the tears of morning. The evening is "quiet as a nun breathless with adoration." The daisy is a silver shield with boss of gold. A great man is a mighty oak, destined to endure for generations. The mountain-tops kiss high heaven. The storm angrily threatens the house on the shore. America is a woman — fair Columbia; or a man — Uncle Sam.

When Shakespeare wished to say that a man's face showed the traces of the hardships and troubles he had lived through, he put it in this way:

Thus is his cheek the map of days outworn.

When some Polynesian savages first saw a watch, they called it "moon," and explained that they did so because it was "round and stayed awake all night." It was an unconscious poet who first called a certain flower the "golden-rod" or a certain bird the "fire-bird." Poetic instinct is back of the picturesque language used in baseball — "lean against the leather," for example, or "butter-fingers." Humor, too, has this same faculty for seeing similarities that poetry has, as when some one remarked that Apollinaris is "the water that tastes as if your foot were asleep."

The poet's mind fairly swarms with comparisons such as these, sometimes called "figures of speech."

4. Differences between Poetry and Prose. Poetry needs to be distinguished from prose, but the distinction is a very difficult one to make. Even in prose our words become highly rhythmical — listen, for example, to an impassioned orator or to a passage from the Bible. Some even speak of "prose poetry," and others of "free verse."

We may best differentiate poetry from prose by calling attention to three qualities that poetry usually possesses.

In the first place, the rhythm of poetry is generally regular — measurable; the word meter, used in connection with poetry, means "measure." That is, the beats in poetry come at definite intervals, whereas in prose they come without its being apparent that any regular arrangement exists.

In the second place, poetry deals in images. It is concrete and exact, not vague and abstract and general. Poetry appeals vividly to all five senses and stimulates them, so that the reader of a good poem feels more alive. When one finishes the reading of a good poem, it has called up in the mind many brilliant and effective pictures, and the comparisons that have been employed enable one to see more truly and clearly many objects that before were perhaps commonplace.

In the third place, poetry appeals primarily to the feelings. Prose as a rule requires us to reason, to work out the causes of things, to settle a problem. Or else it tells a story, but not always with much appeal to the emotions. Poetry works on love, patriotism, fear, compassion, wonder, delight, friendship, hatred, awe. Of course prose, too, often seeks to stir up the feelings, but it is a fact worth noting that the more appeal a piece of prose makes to the emotions, the more likely it is to be rhythmical. As an orator warms up, his words begin to take a definite "time." Many passages of the Bible (often pure poetry in the original Hebrew) are rhythmical in the fine King James prose translation.

5. The Magic of Poetry. Yet even these three traits of poetry do not tell the whole story as to the difference between poetry and prose. Back of all true poetry lurks something that is indefinable, that must be learned by experience rather than teaching. It might be called magic. A true poem, by some strange and wonderful quality of music or words, catches at our heart-strings. Sometimes it is only a line, or two or three lines, that stand out, but they impress themselves on our mind and imagination and will not be forgotten. So when Hamlet, dying, spoke to Horatio and said:

> Absent thee from felicity awhile,
> And in this harsh world draw thy breath with pain
> To tell my story,

the words have a magical turn that makes them forever memorable. There is magic, too, in Keats's

> Charm'd magic casements opening on the foam
> Of perilous seas, in faëry lands forlorn;

and in Wordsworth's question as to the Highland reaper singing at her work:

> Will no one tell me what she sings?
> Perhaps the plaintive numbers flow
> For old, unhappy, far-off things
> And battles long ago.

Without this indefinable and final grace a poem is, somehow, not a poem. It may be metrical, it may be well phrased, it may even have been written by one who is, in others of his writings, a great poet. To poetry without this ultimate beauty we sometimes give the name verse. It was the great merit of Francis T. Palgrave, incidentally, that he had a wonderful knack of being able to distinguish almost infallibly between poetry and prose. In The Golden Treasury one finds the pure gold of poetry; it has the true magic.

6. The Value of Poetry. What can poetry do for you? It is important, first of all, to realize thoroughly the point that has been emphasized a number of times — that the enjoyment of poetry is not an unusual experience, meant for only a small portion of the human race. It is, on the contrary, a universal faculty, and a good poem is concerned with ideas and feelings that every one should be able to comprehend. If here and there some one is unable to enjoy poetry, it is a misfortune — just as some people are, unhappily, color-blind. A poetry-blind person misses the opportunity to understand that which will better enable him to see the loveliness of the world, to have his feelings stirred to their depths with purifying rhythms, to sympathize with the emotions and the aspirations of the rest of mankind as expressed in melody.

But poetry has even a practical side. It stimulates the imagination to such a degree that this faculty of the mind works better in every way. For we all need imagination — to plan enterprises and organizations; to understand other people; to devise novelties; to foresee coming events and opportunities; to anticipate difficulties and by anticipation to overcome them. Any engineer, any business man, any person working on large problems would do well to read a bit of poetry before he sits down to the task of analyzing and answering his problems.

Poetry, moreover, trains the emotions generally; it stimulates the five senses; it increases our appreciation of color effects. At moments when our feelings run high (when we are in love, for example, or when we feel very patriotic, or when we are enjoying a fine spring morning or autumn sunset), poetry enables us to express these feelings and thereby to "let off steam." It improves our sense of the beautiful in life. It teaches us exactness in the use of words. It gives us a finer and truer love of nature.

7. How to Read Poetry. The reading of poems, like the enjoyment of any art, needs to be learned. Perhaps this might be better expressed by saying that poetry is an art to be relearned — for all children love poetry. Begin by realizing that poetry is music — and that music means sound. It is impossible, therefore, to get the full value of a poem unless you read it aloud, although after a while you can acquire the knack of reading aloud in your head, so to speak.

As you read, yield yourself to the poet and his rhythm; let it carry you away. Imagine yourself listening to a beautiful tune played on a violin. Get as much of the meaning as you can, and particularly try to call up in your mind the pictures, the sounds, the smells, the tastes, and the appeals to touch that the poet works into his poem. Try, too, to see the colors he mentions. Sometimes a poem contains a difficult thought, and some poems therefore demand many re-readings. Frequently such re-readings are a courtesy that you owe the poet. Gray spent nine years in the composition of his "Elegy in a Country Churchyard." Wordsworth worked three or four years on his "Ode on Intimations of Immortality."

It is only natural that many perusals of these and other poems are required before you can extract the full meaning that the poet placed in them.

Above all, be patient. Some poems you will like immediately, and they will sing their way into your memory. Others will not appeal to you so much. But remember that it is not always the person who becomes your friend most readily that you like the best. Some people are a little shy and backward, and it takes a little while to draw them out Often they become in time your most loyal friends.

Poems may be like such persons. They may hold you off for a while, and then, all of a sudden, you find that you like them even better than the poems you understood immediately. True poems (like those that Palgrave collected for you) are rich and deep. Make friends of them, and they will repay you in later years with a companionship that will often console weary or sorrowful hours, that will enliven your gayety and increase your happiness. That which poetry expresses cannot be as well expressed in any other way — such is the experience of all the generations of man, in every language and clime.

8. KINDS OF POETRY. Poetry is sometimes subdivided into groups, according to the subject-matter and the manner of treatment. One of the best-known classifications divides poems into epic, dramatic, and lyric. The two former tell a story, but dramatic poetry tells the story in the form of dialogue. It is mainly lyric poetry that we find in Palgrave. Lyric poetry is intensely personal. It expresses the innermost mood of the poet — his individual reaction to a beautiful landscape, a lovely girl, the death of a friend, the thought of his country's greatness, the idea of death, the innocence of a child. Because his mood is so personal, a lyric takes no fixed form. Generally it is brief, and often it may be set to music — the word lyric is derived from the old musical instrument, the lyre. Some regard the lyric as the very essence of all poetry.

THE TECHNIQUE OF VERSE

1. VERSE AS A PATTERN. Meter, as has been said, means "measure." It is used, in connection with verse, to designate the measuring of syllables and (in English) of accents.

In order to understand meter in verse, it is necessary to emphasize the meaning of accent. Every word of more than one syllable in English has one accent; some long words of many syllables may have two or more accents. One-syllable words may also be accented — if they are important words. It is practically impossible for us to talk for any length of time without marking certain syllables or words with accents. Try this, for example, in a monotone: "Did he say I was to go?" These are all one-syllable words, and yet some are marked by your voice with an accent as more important than the rest. Or try this: "The vanity of human wishes is a theme that has often inspired the poet." There are seven accents in this sentence — that is, your voice, in speaking the twenty syllables that compose the sentence, selects seven syllables for special stressing.

The difference between prose and verse does not, therefore, consist in the fact that prose has no accented syllables. Whenever we speak we accent some syllables. But verse arranges these accents in a certain scheme — on a pattern determined beforehand. You can see that the possible patterns would be numerous. But in English, in view of the fact that we rarely speak more than three syllables at a time without stressing one of them, the patterns are based on a very simple plan: each group of syllables contains either two or three syllables.

2. Names of Feet and Lines. Let us see what some of the patterns would be — calling an unaccented syllable x, an accented syllable a:

x–a is called iambic.
Example: detail′

a–x is called trochaic.
Example: rúnning

x–x–a is called anapestic.
Example: at a bound′

a–x–x is called dactylic.
Example: vánity

x–x is called pyrrhic.
Example: of a

a–a is called spondaic.
Example: blúe-eyed′

But these groups of syllables do not make up the whole of the pattern of verse. The feet of verse are themselves arranged in still larger patterns called lines of verse; and these in turn are often arranged in still larger patterns called stanzas. A line consists of several feet. A stanza is a group of lines.

Lines may be of varying lengths — one foot, monometer; two feet, dimeter; three feet, trimeter; four feet, tetrameter; five feet, pentameter; six feet, hexameter; seven feet, heptameter; eight feet, octameter. In order to indicate the pattern of a given line, we name (1) the character of the predominating foot; and (2) the number of feet in the line.

Thus we say that this line is iambic pentameter:

x a x a x a x a x a

There's not′ a nook′ within′ this sol′ emn pass.′

This line is anapestic trimeter:

x x a x x a x x a

Of his fault′ and his sor′ row behind.′

3. Variations in Meter. But one important fact must be kept in mind. If the pattern on which a poet arranged his lines were rigidly adhered to, it would in the end produce an unpleasant monotony — a sing-song effect that would not be true music. The poet, therefore, varies his measure a bit, just as the musician does when he substitutes two quarter-notes for a half-note.

The poet, however, allows himself even more freedom, and makes many substitutions in different types of feet.

Thus in an iambic line you may find, as substitutes for any of the iambs, a trochaic foot, an anapestic foot, a spondaic foot, or a pyrrhic foot.

In a trochaic line you may find, as substitutes for any of the trochees, a dactyl or a spondee.

In an anapestic line iambs may substitute for the anapests.

In a dactylic line will occur many spondees.

It is by the type of foot that occurs most often that the character of the line is determined. Owing to the freedom with which poets make substitutions, it is often a little difficult to name the predominant foot, but with a little practice one learns to name the foot by the general march of the line.

4. The Use of Rhyme. Accent is one form of rhythm; what is called rhyme is still another form of rhythm. In verse, rhyme is used for its own sake and also to mark out the pattern of stanzas. Not all poems, however, have rhyme; and in ancient Greek and Latin literature it is not used at all. Rhyme came in vogue in very late Latin literature and in the early writings of the Romance languages; it was later adopted by the Germanic languages, including English.

Rhyme may be defined as a similarity of sound between two or more words, usually at the ends of lines. A true rhyme in English has four characteristics: (1) it always falls on accented syllables; (2) the vowel sounds in these accented syllables are the same; (3) the sound that follows these vowel sounds in the accented syllables is the same; (4) the sound that precedes the accented syllables is different.

Thus night and bright, see and me, broken and token, tenderly and slenderly, prize and despise, rough and muff rhyme. Notice that it is not the spelling but the sound which is important. Notice, too, that some rhymes are monosyllabic or single rhymes (tea and be); some are dissyllabic or double (rowing and going); and some are trisyllabic or triple (groaningly and moaningly). Rhymes may also occur inside a line, and in that case are called internal or leonine rhymes; for example:

Like to the clear in highest sphere.

Occasionally we find what are called conventional rhymes, based usually on the spelling rather than on the sound, as love and move, dignity and lie, move and rove.

5. Some Stanza Forms. Some stanza forms are well established in English; others are the result of some individual poet's fancy. Especially in lyric poetry the form of the poem is likely to follow the mood expressed, and poets will create new stanza moulds for each new poem.

A favorite form is the ballad stanza. This is equally popular in narrative and in lyric poetry, because originally all ballads, even when they told a story, were sung — perhaps by some wandering minstrel. The ballad stanza consists, usually, of a four-line stanza, the first and third lines of which are iambic tetrameter, the second and fourth iambic trimeter. The second and fourth lines rhyme.[1] Example: "Sally in our Alley."

Another great favorite with lyric poets is the sonnet, always written in fourteen lines of iambic pentameter. Originally an Italian form, the sonnet may be found in English with two rhyme schemes. The Italian or Petrarchan form of the sonnet is rhymed thus: the octave (or first eight lines) has the first, fourth, fifth, and eighth lines rhyming on the same sound; the second, third, sixth, and seventh rhyming on the same sound (a–b–b–a–a–b–b–a). The sestet of the Italian form rhymes either on two or three sounds, variously arranged (c–d–e–c–d–e or c–d–c–d–c–d, for example). Example: Milton's "On His Blindness."

The Elizabethan or Shakespearean form of the sonnet arranges the octave thus: a–b–a–b–c–d–c–d. The sestet is rhymed thus: e–f–e–f–g–g. Example: Shakespeare's "That Time of Year."

The ode is frequently found in lyric poetry. This is a Greek form, much used by Pindar; and we often speak of the Pindaric Ode. The Pindaric Ode is very elaborate and very regular, following, however, no fixed model. As an example may be examined Gray's "The Bard." Usually the ode in English signifies a serious, dignified poem, on an important theme, generally quite long, in which the stanza form often varies as the mood of the poet changes. The greatest ode in the English language is Wordsworth's "Ode on Intimations of Immortality."

Within a poem we often find couplets and quatrains. The former are lines rhymed in pairs; for example, the last two lines of "That Time of Year." The quatrain is a four-line stanza, usually rhymed a–b–a–b, as in the first four lines of "That Time of Year." Gray's "Elegy in a Country Churchyard" is written throughout in quatrains; the last four lines of Wordsworth's "Ode on Immortality" form a quatrain.

Sometimes poems are classified as songs or elegies, but these classifications refer rather to subject matter than to form, since either a song or an elegy may be composed in a wide variety of stanzas.

6. Figures of Speech. As was pointed out in the section on "The Enjoyment of Poetry," poets are very fond of making comparisons — just as we all are; but the comparisons of poetry are usually more striking and unexpected than those of prose. These comparisons, called figures of speech, have been classified in groups, and it is often convenient to know the names of these groups.

[1] To designate rhymes we use: (1) the first letters of the alphabet to indicate lines that rhyme; (2) the last letters of the alphabet to indicate lines that have no rhyme. Thus in the ballad stanza we should say: Rhyme-scheme: x–a–y–a.

Similes and metaphors are direct comparisons. In the simile a word indicating comparison — like or as — is employed; in the metaphor this word of comparison is taken for granted. Thus we may say of a brave man either "He is like a lion," or "He is a lion." Which is more vivid and powerful? Poets frequently have preferred metaphors, because they seem more intense and effective.

In synecdoche a part is taken for the whole, or a whole for the part, as when a boatswain calls "all hands to the deck"; or when a newspaper says that "the town was starving." In the former the hands stand for the sailors; in the latter, the town for the people.

Metonymy names an idea by another idea associated with it. Tennyson, describing the sacrifice of Iphigenia at the altar, makes her say: "The bright death touched my throat," death here indicating the knife.

Most poets like personification; during the eighteenth century it was used to a point where it became wearisome. In personification abstract qualities or inanimate objects are endowed with life and personality, as when Gray says: "Let not Ambition mock their useful toil."

7. Other Devices Used by Poets. Most poets love onomatopœia — the use of words which by their very sound suggest the sense. Some words are naturally onomatopoetic — buzz, roar, splash. But poets, by their skill, are able to assemble whole groups of words which, taken together, imitate the meaning. Thus Coleridge says: "The sails did sigh like sedge." Fine examples in Palgrave are Dryden's "Song for Saint Cecilia's Day" and Collins's "The Passions."

Apostrophe is frequently found in poetry. This is not the mark of punctuation, but the addressing of the Deity, of a person not present, or of an inanimate object as if present. It is often used in conjunction with personification. Shelley's "Threnos" begins: "O World! O Life! O Time!"

Poets like paradox — a self-contradictory statement, as when Wordsworth speaks of "aching joys." They love, too, the epigram — a short saying, with an unexpected turn of thought. See, for example, Lovelace's "To Lucasta, on Going to the Wars."

Alliteration was the foundation of Anglo-Saxon meter, and is still very common. It is sometimes called beginning-rhyme. Words beginning with the same consonant are said to alliterate; all vowels alliterate. What words alliterate in this line from Gray? —

The plowman homeward plods his weary way.

A NOTE ON FRANCIS TURNER PALGRAVE

Fully to understand The Golden Treasury, one must know something about its gifted compiler and editor, Francis Turner Palgrave.

His paternal grandfather was a stock-broker named Meyer Cohen.

His father, named Francis, assumed the cognomen of Palgrave on his marriage, and was an ardent member of the English Church. He was a member of Parliament and later for many years in the government service, receiving the honor of knighthood in 1832. Sir Francis Palgrave won renown as an historian and by his methods deeply influenced other historians. Palgrave's mother was a woman of fine and intense culture, who was especially devoted to Italian literature. From the birth of Francis Turner Palgrave, on September 28, 1824, he was surrounded by a literary and scholarly atmosphere, and he breathed in from babyhood a knowledge of the Greek and Latin classics, of the best in modern literature, and of the finest in pictorial art, sculpture, and architecture. His mother had a decided gift in draughting and more than ordinary knowledge of architecture. Between her and her children the bond was unusually close.

Palgrave was educated first at home, later at the famous Charterhouse School, and at Oxford. Always he left a lasting impression as a scholar. He made the acquaintance of many noted men, and became intimate particularly with the great poet Alfred Tennyson, their friendship continuing from March 31, 1849, the memorable day when they first became acquainted, until Tennyson's death in 1892.

For a time Palgrave was secretary to Gladstone, the British statesman. Later he entered the government service, in the Education Department of the Privy Council Office, and like his father gave faithful service for many years. For ten years, from 1885 to 1895, he was Professor of Poetry at Oxford. Throughout his life he employed his leisure in the composition of verse and in critical work of all kinds. He died October 24, 1897.

Most famous of the works of Palgrave was the selection of poems gathered under the happy title of THE GOLDEN TREASURY.

In 1859, Palgrave was making a short tour with Tennyson through Cornwall and the Scilly Islands. They were joined by Holman Hunt, a noted painter; by Thomas Woolner, an equally well-known sculptor and poet, and by Val Prinsep, a painter and writer. All these men were tremendous conversationalists, and one can well imagine what an amazing impression they must have produced on any listener. It was reported, indeed, that a stranger, who happened to be dining in the same hotel with them one day, listened excitedly to their conversation at a near-by table, and later accosted them with the words: "Of all the most extraordinary and interesting men I have ever seen, you are the most so." While walking together the friends talked so fast and so eagerly that they sometimes found it necessary to make a rule that each one, when particularly desirous of being heard, should enforce silence on the others by prefacing his words with an uplifted hand.

It was during this expedition, "while traversing the wild scenery of Treryn Dinas," says Palgrave, that the scheme of THE GOLDEN TREASURY was first brought forward. It received immediate encouragement and help from Tennyson, and it was largely because of Tennyson's kindly urging that the work was carried forward on Palgrave's return to London. Tennyson continued to give detailed and minute assistance at every turn, and with no injustice to Palgrave, the result may almost be regarded as the product of a collaboration with the great poet.

Yet Palgrave's exquisite taste, which shunned the mediocre and the second-rate and was content only with the best, must be regarded as the chief factor in the remarkable success which was achieved. THE GOLDEN TREASURY stands out as without question the finest anthology in the English language, and as one of the two or three best in any language. Palgrave said his object was not only to give pleasure, but to arouse thought and discussion about poetry. He wanted, too, to provide a book which would lend itself to reading at all times and in all places; and to enjoy poetry in "the fortunate moments of travel or the country" was particularly after his heart. Published in the summer of 1861, edition after edition has in the intervening years been called for, and many millions of readers have through THE GOLDEN TREASURY found the gateway to poetry.

THE GOLDEN TREASURY AS AN ANTHOLOGY

Palgrave's THE GOLDEN TREASURY falls into the class of books called anthologies.

The word anthology comes from two Greek words — anthos, meaning "flower," and logos, meaning a "gathering." In other words, an anthology is a garland, a bouquet — but in a figurative sense; and the garland presented is one of poems and not of flowers.

The first maker of an anthology was an ancient Greek, named Meleager, who was born in the town of Gadara in northern Palestine (the Ramoth-Gilead of the Old Testament) and educated in Tyre. His later life was spent in the island of Cos, where he died at an advanced age, towards the beginning of the first century B.C. He was the compiler of the celebrated Greek Anthology, which contains some of the finest lyric poems of Greek literature. Unlike Palgrave, he contributed to his own anthology, and his fame is founded on one hundred and thirty-four poems which have come down to us in his compilation. Among these poems is one that serves as preface to the whole collection. In it Meleager gives the names of the various poets whom he includes in his gathering, and he adds a brief poetic description of each of these poets. Thus he says (to quote a bit out of this fine poem, in the beautiful translation by J. W. Mackail):

"Dear Muse, for whom bringest thou this gardenful of song, or who is he that fashioned the garland of poets? Meleager made it, and wrought out this gift as a remembrance of noble Diocles, inweaving many lilies of Anyte, and many martagons of Moero, and of Sappho little, but all roses; and the narcissus of choral Melanippides budding into hymns, and the fresh shoot of the vine-blossom of Simonides."

Others who followed Meleager simply added to his collection, until it became a huge, unwieldy tome, filled with the productions of poets of all the ages of Greek literature. The idea was imitated by others, but in all the literatures of the world, no other anthology has won such fame as that of Meleager — with the one exception of Palgrave.

What is it that has given Palgrave such a secure place, and has brought about the constant reprinting, year after year, of his collection of English poetry? The answer can be given very briefly: Palgrave's good taste. Palgrave was deeply devoted to the study, not only of English, but of Greek, Italian, and other literatures. He was highly cultured, too, in the fine arts, and was a good judge of painting and of architecture. Above all, he loved poetry — loved it passionately. As a result, his taste in literature became, not infallible, for he himself acknowledged errors he had made and changed his anthology slightly in successive editions, but so fine, so acute that, when he came to make this anthology, he produced a work that stands out as the best of its kind. Just in the same way, some people can go into the garden, pick blossoms of various sorts, and make a harmoniously arranged bouquet, while others, using the same flowers, will produce not a pretty grouping — but just a number of flowers ineffectively lumped together.

But not only was Palgrave's taste good; he also managed to produce a homogeneous whole. The Golden Treasury is a unit. One poem leads naturally to the next; each of the Books contains such poems as properly belong together; one can read the collection continuously and derive pleasure from each poem separately and from the associations that Palgrave brings to each poem.

There is, too, the excellent historical interest that Palgrave contrived to secure. Each section of the book gives a picture of the age in which it appeared, and The Golden Treasury as a whole gives a wonderfully effective and impressive picture of the greatness of English poetry, which has managed to produce so many masterpieces.

THE GOLDEN TREASURY

BOOK FIRST

1

SPRING

Spring, the sweet Spring, is the year's pleasant king;
Then blooms each thing, then maids dance in a ring,
Cold doth not sting, the pretty birds do sing,
  Cuckoo, jug-jug, pu-we, to-witta-woo!

The palm and may make country houses gay,
Lambs frisk and play, the shepherds pipe all day,
And we hear aye birds tune this merry lay,
  Cuckoo, jug-jug, pu-we, to-witta-woo.

The fields breathe sweet, the daisies kiss our feet,
Young lovers meet, old wives a-sunning sit,
In every street these tunes our ears do greet,
  Cuckoo, jug-jug, pu-we, to-witta-woo!
    Spring! the sweet Spring!

T. Nash

2

THE FAIRY LIFE

1

Where the bee sucks, there suck I:
In a cowslip's bell I lie;
There I couch, when owls do cry:
On the bat's back I do fly
After summer merrily.
    Merrily, merrily, shall I live now,
    Under the blossom that hangs on the bough!

3

II

Come unto these yellow sands,
And then take hands:
Courtsied when you have, and kiss'd
The wild waves whist,
Foot it featly here and there;
And, sweet Sprites, the burthen bear.
Hark, hark!
Bow-bow.
The watch-dogs bark:
Bow-wow.
Hark, hark! I hear
The strain of strutting chanticleer
Cry, Cock-a-diddle-dow!

W. Shakespeare

SUMMONS TO LOVE

Phœbus, arise!
And paint the sable skies
With azure, white, and red:
Rouse Memnon's mother from her Tithon's bed
That she may thy career with roses spread:
The nightingales thy coming each-where sing:
Make an eternal Spring!
Give life to this dark world which lieth dead;
Spread forth thy golden hair
In larger locks than thou wast wont before,
And emperor-like decore
With diadem of pearl thy temples fair:
Chase hence the ugly night
Which serves but to make dear thy glorious light.

— This is that happy morn,
That day, long-wishéd day
Of all my life so dark,
(If cruel stars have not my ruin sworn

And fates my hopes betray),
Which, purely white, deserves
An everlasting diamond should it mark.
This is the morn should bring unto this grove
My Love, to hear and recompense my love.
Fair King, who all preserves,
But show thy blushing beams,
And thou two sweeter eyes
Shalt see than those which by Penéus' streams
Did once thy heart surprise.
Now, Flora, deck thy self in fairest guise:
If that ye winds would hear
A voice surpassing far Amphion's lyre,
Your furious chiding stay;
Let Zephyr only breathe,
And with her tresses play.
— The winds all silent are,
And Phœbus in his chair
Ensaffroning sea and air
Makes vanish every star:
Night like a drunkard reels
Beyond the hills, to shun his flaming wheels:
The fields with flowers are deck'd in every hue,
The clouds with orient gold spangle their blue;
Here is the pleasant place —
And nothing wanting is, save She, alas!

W. Drummond of Hawthornden

5
TIME AND LOVE

I

When I have seen by Time's fell hand defaced
The rich proud cost of outworn buried age;
When sometime lofty towers I see down-razed,
And brass eternal slave to mortal rage;

When I have seen the hungry ocean gain
Advantage on the kingdom of the shore,

And the firm soil win of the watery main,
Increasing store with loss, and loss with store;

When I have seen such interchange of state,
Or state itself confounded to decay,
Ruin hath taught me thus to ruminate —
That Time will come and take my Love away:
This thought is as a death, which cannot choose
But weep to have that which it fears to lose.

W. Shakespeare

6

II

Since brass, nor stone, nor earth, nor boundless sea,
But sad mortality o'ersways their power,
How with this rage shall beauty hold a plea,
Whose action is no stronger than a flower?

O how shall summer's honey breath hold out
Against the wreckful siege of battering days,
When rocks impregnable are not so stout
Nor gates of steel so strong, but time decays?

O fearful meditation! where, alack!
Shall Time's best jewel from Time's chest lie hid?
Or what strong hand can hold his swift foot back,
Or who his spoil of beauty can forbid?

O! none, unless this miracle have might,
That in black ink my love may still shine bright.

W. Shakespeare

7

THE PASSIONATE SHEPHERD TO HIS LOVE

Come live with me and be my Love,
And we will all the pleasures prove
That hills and valleys, dale and field,
And all the craggy mountains yield.

There will we sit upon the rocks
And see the shepherds feed their flocks,
By shallow rivers, to whose falls
Melodious birds sing madrigals.

There will I make thee beds of roses
And a thousand fragrant posies,
A cap of flowers, and a kirtle
Embroider'd all with leaves of myrtle.

A gown made of the finest wool,
Which from our pretty lambs we pull,
Fair linéd slippers for the cold,
With buckles of the purest gold.

A belt of straw and ivy buds
With coral clasps and amber studs:
And if these pleasures may thee move,
Come live with me and be my Love.

Thy silver dishes for thy meat
As precious as the gods do eat,
Shall on an ivory table be Prepared each day for thee and me.

The shepherd swains shall dance and sing
For thy delight each May-morning:
If these delights thy mind may move,
Then live with me and be my Love.

C. Marlowe

8

OMNIA VINCIT

Fain would I change that note
To which fond Love hath charm'd me
Long long to sing by rote,
Fancying that that harm'd me:
Yet when this thought doth come

"Love is the perfect sum
Of all delight,"
I have no other choice
Either for pen or voice
To sing or write.

O Love! they wrong thee much
That say thy sweet is bitter,
When thy rich fruit is such
As nothing can be sweeter.
Fair house of joy and bliss,
Where truest pleasure is,
I do adore thee:
I know thee what thou art,
I serve thee with my heart,
And fall before thee!

Anon.

9
A MADRIGAL

Crabbed Age and Youth
Cannot live together:
Youth is full of pleasance,
Age is full of care;
Youth like summer morn,
Age like winter weather,
Youth like summer brave,
Age like winter bare:
Youth is full of sport,
Age's breath is short,
Youth is nimble, Age is lame:
Youth is hot and bold,
Age is weak and cold,
Youth is wild, and Age is tame: —
Age, I do abhor thee,
Youth, I do adore thee;
O my Love, my Love is young!
Age, I do defy thee —

O sweet shepherd, hie thee,
For methinks thou stay'st too long.
W. Shakespeare

10

Under the greenwood tree
Who loves to lie with me,
And turn his merry note
Unto the sweet bird's throat —
Come hither, come hither, come hither!
Here shall he see
No enemy
But winter and rough weather.

Who doth ambition shun
And loves to live i' the sun,
Seeking the food he eats
And pleased with what he gets —
Come hither, come hither, come hither!
Here shall he see
No enemy
But winter and rough weather.
W. Shakespeare

11

It was a lover and his lass
With a hey and a ho, and a hey nonino!
That o'er the green cornfield did pass
In the springtime, the only pretty ring time,
When birds do sing hey ding a ding:
Sweet lovers love the Spring.

Between the acres of the rye
These pretty country folks would lie:
This carol they began that hour,
How that life was but a flower:

And therefore take the present time
With a hey and a ho and a hey nonino!

For love is crownéd with the prime
In springtime, the only pretty ring time,
When birds do sing hey ding a ding:
Sweet lovers love the Spring.

W. Shakespeare

12
PRESENT IN ABSENCE

Absence, hear thou this protestation
Against thy strength,
Distance, and length;
Do what thou canst for alteration:
For hearts of truest mettle
Absence doth join, and Time doth settle.

Who loves a mistress of such quality,
His mind hath found
Affection's ground
Beyond time, place, and mortality.
To hearts that cannot vary
Absence is present, Time doth tarry.

By absence this good means I gain,
That I can catch her,
Where none can match her,
In some close corner of my brain:
There I embrace and kiss her;
And so I both enjoy and miss her.

J. Donne

13
VIA AMORIS

Highway, since you my chief Parnassus be,
And that my Muse, to some ears not unsweet,
Tempers her words to trampling horses' feet
More oft than to a chamber melody, —

Now, blesséd you bear onward blesséd me
To her, where I my heart, safe-left, shall meet;
My Muse and I must you of duty greet
With thanks and wishes, wishing thankfully;

Be you still fair, honor'd by public heed;
By no encroachment wrong'd, nor time forgot;
Nor blamed for blood, nor shamed for sinful deed;
And that you know I envy you no lot

Of highest wish, I wish you so much bliss, —
Hundreds of years you Stella's feet may kiss!

Sir P. Sidney

14

ABSENCE

Being your slave, what should I do but tend
Upon the hours and times of your desire?
I have no precious time at all to spend
Nor services to do, till you require:

Nor dare I chide the world-without-end hour
Whilst I, my sovereign, watch the clock for you,
Nor think the bitterness of absence sour
When you have bid your servant once adieu:

Nor dare I question with my jealous thought
Where you may be, or your affairs suppose,
But like a sad slave, stay and think of nought
Save, where you are, how happy you make those; —

So true a fool is love, that in your will
Though you do anything, he thinks no ill.

W. Shakespeare

15

How like a winter hath my absence been
From Thee, the pleasure of the fleeting year!

What freezings have I felt, what dark days seen,
What old December's bareness everywhere!

And yet this time removed was summer's time:
The teeming autumn, big with rich increase,
Bearing the wanton burden of the prime
Like widow'd wombs after their lords' decease:

Yet this abundant issue seem'd to me
But hope of orphans, and unfather'd fruit;
For summer and his pleasures wait on thee,
And, thou away, the very birds are mute;

Or if they sing, 'tis with so dull a cheer,
That leaves look pale, dreading the winter's near.

W. Shakespeare

16

A CONSOLATION

When in disgrace with fortune and men's eyes
I all alone beweep my outcast state,
And trouble deaf heaven with my bootless cries,
And look upon myself, and curse my fate;

Wishing me like to one more rich in hope,
Featured like him, like him with friends possest,
Desiring this man's art, and that man's scope,
With what I most enjoy contented least;

Yet in these thoughts myself almost despising,
Haply I think on Thee — and then my state,
Like to the lark at break of day arising
From sullen earth, sings hymns at heaven's gate;

For thy sweet love remember'd, such wealth brings
That then I scorn to change my state with kings.

W. Shakespeare

17

THE UNCHANGEABLE

O never say that I was false of heart,
Though absence seem'd my flame to qualify:
As easy might I from myself depart
As from my soul, which in thy breast doth lie;

That is my home of love; if I have ranged,
Like him that travels, I return again,
Just to the time, not with the time exchanged,
So that myself bring water for my stain.

Never believe, though in my nature reign'd
All frailties that besiege all kinds of blood,
That it could so preposterously be stain'd
To leave for nothing all thy sum of good:

For nothing this wide universe I call,
Save thou, my rose: in it thou art my all.

W. Shakespeare

18

To me, fair Friend, you never can be old,
For as you were when first your eye I eyed
Such seems your beauty still. Three winters cold
Have from the forests shook three summers' pride;

Three beauteous springs to yellow autumn turn'd
In process of the seasons have I seen,
Three April perfumes in three hot Junes burn'd,
Since first I saw you fresh, which yet are green.

Ah! yet doth beauty, like a dial hand,
Steal from his figure, and no pace perceived;
So your sweet hue, which methinks still doth stand,
Hath motion, and mine eye may be deceived:

For fear of which, hear this, thou age unbred, —
Ere you were born, was beauty's summer dead.

W. Shakespeare

19

ROSALINE

Like to the clear in highest sphere
Where all imperial glory shines,
Of selfsame color is her hair
Whether unfolded, or in twines:
  Heigh ho, fair Rosaline!
Her eyes are sapphires set in snow,
Resembling heaven by every wink;
The Gods do fear whenas they glow,
And I do tremble when I think
  Heigh ho, would she were mine!

Her cheeks are like the blushing cloud
That beautifies Aurora's face,
Or like the silver crimson shroud
That Phœbus' smiling looks doth grace;
  Heigh ho, fair Rosaline!
Her lips are like two budded roses
Whom ranks of lilies neighbor nigh,
Within which bounds she balm encloses
Apt to entice a deity:
  Heigh ho, would she were mine!

Her neck is like a stately tower
Where Love himself imprison'd lies,
To watch for glances every hour
From her divine and sacred eyes:
  Heigh ho, for Rosaline!
Her paps are centers of delight,
Her breasts are orbs of heavenly frame,
Where Nature molds the dew of light
To feed perfection with the same:
  Heigh ho, would she were mine!

With orient pearl, with ruby red,
With marble white, with sapphire blue
Her body every way is fed,
Yet soft in touch and sweet in view:

Heigh ho, fair Rosaline!
Nature herself her shape admires;
The Gods are wounded in her sight;
And Love forsakes his heavenly fires
And at her eyes his brand doth light:
Heigh ho, would she were mine!

Then muse not, Nymphs, though I bemoan
The absence of fair Rosaline,
Since for a fair there's fairer none,
Nor for her virtues so divine:
Heigh ho, fair Rosaline!
Heigh ho, my heart! would God that she were mine!

T. Lodge

20

COLIN

Beauty sat bathing by a spring
Where fairest shades did hide her;
The winds blew calm, the birds did sing,
The cool streams ran beside her.
My wanton thoughts enticed mine eye
To see what was forbidden:
But better memory said, fie!
So vain desire was chidden: —
Hey nonny nonny O!
Hey nonny nonny!

Into a slumber then I fell,
When fond imagination
Seeméd to see, but could not tell
Her feature or her fashion.
But ev'n as babes in dreams do smile,
And sometimes fall a-weeping,
So I awaked, as wise this while
As when I fell a-sleeping: —
Hey nonny nonny O!
Hey nonny nonny!

The Shepherd Tonie

21

A PICTURE

Sweet Love, if thou wilt gain a monarch's glory,
Subdue her heart, who makes me glad and sorry:
Out of thy golden quiver
Take thou thy strongest arrow
That will through bone and marrow,
And me and thee of grief and fear deliver: —
But come behind, for if she look upon thee,
Alas! poor Love! then thou art woe-begone thee!

Anon.

22

A SONG FOR MUSIC

Weep you no more, sad fountains: —
What need you flow so fast?
Look how the snowy mountains
Heaven's sun doth gently waste!
But my Sun's heavenly eyes
View not your weeping,
That now lies sleeping
Softly, now softly lies,
Sleeping.

Sleep is a reconciling,
A rest that peace begets: —
Doth not the sun rise smiling,
When fair at even he sets?
— Rest you, then, rest, sad eyes!
Melt not in weeping!
While She lies sleeping
Softly, now softly lies,
Sleeping!

Anon.

23
TO HIS LOVE

Shall I compare thee to a summer's day?
Thou art more lovely and more temperate:
Rough winds do shake the darling buds of May,
And summer's lease hath all too short a date:

Sometime too hot the eye of heaven shines,
And often is his gold complexion dimm'd:
And every fair from fair sometime declines,
By chance, or nature's changing course, untrimm'd.

But thy eternal summer shall not fade
Nor lose possession of that fair thou owest;
Nor shall Death brag thou wanderest in his shade,
When in eternal lines to time thou growest: —

So long as men can breathe, or eyes can see,
So long lives this, and this gives life to thee.

W. Shakespeare

24
TO HIS LOVE

When in the chronicle of wasted time
I see descriptions of the fairest wights,
And beauty making beautiful old rhyme
In praise of ladies dead, and lovely knights;

Then in the blazon of sweet beauty's best
Of hand, of foot, of lip, of eye, of brow,
I see their antique pen would have exprest
Ev'n such a beauty as you master now.

So all their praises are but prophecies
Of this our time, all, you prefiguring;
And for they look'd but with divining eyes,
They had not skill enough your worth to sing:

For we, which now behold these present days,
Have eyes to wonder, but lack tongues to praise.

W. Shakespeare

25

BASIA

Turn back, you wanton flyer,
And answer my desire
With mutual greeting.
Yet bend a little nearer, —
True beauty still shines clearer
In closer meeting!
Hearts with hearts delighted
Should strive to be united,
Each other's arms with arms enchaining, —
Hearts with a thought,
Rosy lips with a kiss still entertaining.

What harvest half so sweet is
As still to reap the kisses
Grown ripe in sowing?
And straight to be receiver
Of that which thou art giver,
Rich in bestowing?
There is no strict observing
Of times' or seasons' swerving,
There is ever one fresh spring abiding; —
Then what we sow with our lips
Let us reap, love's gains dividing.

T. Campion

26

ADVICE TO A GIRL

Never love unless you can
Bear with all the faults of man!
Men sometimes will jealous be
Though but little cause they see,
And hang the head as discontent,
And speak what straight they will repent.

Men, that but one Saint adore,
Make a show of love to more;
Beauty must be scorn'd in none,
Though but truly served in one:
For what is courtship but disguise?
True hearts may have dissembling eyes.

Men, when their affairs require,
Must awhile themselves retire;
Sometimes hunt, and sometimes hawk,
And not ever sit and talk: —
If these and such-like you can bear,
Then like, and love, and never fear!

T. Campion

27
LOVE'S PERJURIES

On a day, alack the day!
Love, whose month is ever May,
Spied a blossom passing fair
Playing in the wanton air:
Through the velvet leaves the wind,
All unseen, 'gan passage find;
That the lover, sick to death,
Wish'd himself the heaven's breath.
Air, quoth he, thy cheeks may blow;
Air, would I might triumph so!
But, alack, my hand is sworn
Ne'er to pluck thee from thy thorn:
Vow, alack, for youth unmeet;
Youth so apt to pluck a sweet.
Do not call it sin in me
That I am forsworn for thee:
Thou for whom Jove would swear
Juno but an Ethiope were,
And deny himself for Jove,
Turning mortal for thy love.

W. Shakespeare

28

A SUPPLICATION

Forget not yet the tried intent
Of such a truth as I have meant;
My great travail so gladly spent,
Forget not yet!

Forget not yet when first began
The weary life ye know, since whan
The suit, the service none tell can;
Forget not yet!

Forget not yet the great assays,
The cruel wrong, the scornful ways,
The painful patience in delays,
Forget not yet!

Forget not! O, forget not this,
How long ago hath been, and is
The mind that never meant amiss —
Forget not yet!

Forget not then thine own approved
The which so long hath thee so loved,
Whose steadfast faith yet never moved —
Forget not this!

Sir T. Wyat

29

TO AURORA

O if thou knew'st how thou thyself dost harm,
And dost prejudge thy bliss, and spoil my rest;
Then thou would'st melt the ice out of thy breast
And thy relenting heart would kindly warm.

O if thy pride did not our joys control,
What world of loving wonders should'st thou see!
For if I saw thee once transform'd in me,
Then in thy bosom I would pour my soul;

Then all my thoughts should in thy visage shine,
And if that aught mischanced thou should'st not moan
Nor bear the burden of thy griefs alone;
No, I would have my share in what were thine:

And whilst we thus should make our sorrows one,
This happy harmony would make them none.

W. Alexander, Earl of Sterline

30
IN LACRIMAS

I saw my Lady weep,
And Sorrow proud to be advancéd so
In those fair eyes where all perfections keep.
Her face was full of woe,
But such a woe (believe me) as wins more hearts
Than Mirth can do with her enticing parts.

Sorrow was there made fair,
And Passion, wise; Tears, a delightful thing;
Silence, beyond all speech, a wisdom rare:
She made her sighs to sing,
And all things with so sweet a sadness move
As made my heart at once both grieve and love.
O fairer than aught else
The world can show, leave off in time to grieve!
Enough, enough: your joyful look excels:
Tears kill the heart, believe.
O strive not to be excellent in woe,
Which only breeds your beauty's overthrow.

Anon.

31
TRUE LOVE

Let me not to the marriage of true minds
Admit impediments. Love is not love
Which alters when it alteration finds,
Or bends with the remover to remove: —

O no! it is an ever-fixéd mark
That looks on tempests, and is never shaken;
It is the star to every wandering bark,
Whose worth's unknown, although his height be taken.

Love's not Time's fool, though rosy lips and cheeks
Within his bending sickle's compass come,
Love alters not with his brief hours and weeks,
But bears it out ev'n to the edge of doom: —

If this be error, and upon me proved,
I never writ, nor no man ever loved.

W. Shakespeare

32
A DITTY

My true-love hath my heart, and I have his,
By just exchange one for another given:
I hold his dear, and mine he cannot miss,
There never was a better bargain driven:
My true-love hath my heart, and I have his.

His heart in me keeps him and me in one,
My heart in him his thoughts and senses guides:
He loves my heart, for once it was his own,
I cherish his because in me it bides:
My true-love hath my heart, and I have his.

Sir P. Sidney

33
LOVE'S INSIGHT

Though others may Her brow adore
Yet more must I, that therein see far more
Than any other's eyes have power to see:
She is to me
More than to any others she can be!
I can discern more secret notes
That in the margin of her cheeks Love quotes,

Than any else besides have art to read:
No looks proceed
From those fair eyes but to me wonder breed.

Anon.

34
LOVE'S OMNIPRESENCE

Were I as base as is the lowly plain,
And you, my Love, as high as heaven above,
Yet should the thoughts of me your humble swain
Ascend to heaven, in honor of my Love.

Were I as high as heaven above the plain,
And you, my Love, as humble and as low
As are the deepest bottoms of the main,
Whereso'er you were, with you my love should go.

Were you the earth, dear Love, and I the skies,
My love should shine on you like to the sun,
And look upon you with ten thousand eyes
Till heaven wax'd blind, and till the world were done.

Whereso'er I am, below, or else above you,
Whereso'er you are, my heart shall truly love you.

J. Sylvester

35
CARPE DIEM

O Mistress mine, where are you roaming?
O stay and hear! your true-love's coming
That can sing both high and low;
Trip no further, pretty sweeting,
Journeys end in lovers meeting —
Every wise man's son doth know.

What is love? 'tis not hereafter;
Present mirth hath present laughter,
What's to come is still unsure:

In delay there lies no plenty, —
Then come kiss me, Sweet-and-twenty,
Youth's a stuff will not endure.

W. Shakespeare.

36
AN HONEST AUTOLYCUS

Fine knacks for ladies, cheap, choice, brave, and new,
Good pennyworths, — but money cannot move:
I keep a fair but for the Fair to view;
A beggar may be liberal of love.
Though all my wares be trash, the heart is true —
The heart is true.

Great gifts are guiles and look for gifts again;
My trifles come as treasures from my mind;
It is a precious jewel to be plain;
Sometimes in shell the orient'st pearls we find; —
Of others take a sheaf, of me a grain!
Of me a grain!

Anon.

37
WINTER

When icicles hang by the wall
And Dick the shepherd blows his nail,
And Tom bears logs into the hall,
And milk comes frozen home in pail,
When blood is nipt, and ways be foul,
Then nightly sings the staring owl
Tu-whit!
To-who! A merry note!
While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

When all about the wind doth blow,
And coughing drowns the parson's saw,
And birds sit brooding in the snow,
And Marian's nose looks red and raw,

When roasted crabs hiss in the bowl —
Then nightly sings the staring owl
Tu-whit!
To-who! A merry note!
While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

W. Shakespeare

38

That time of year thou may'st in me behold
When yellow leaves, or none, or few, do hang
Upon those boughs which shake against the cold,
Bare ruin'd choirs, where late the sweet birds sang:

In me thou see'st the twilight of such day
As after sunset fadeth in the west,
Which by and by black night doth take away,
Death's second self, that seals up all in rest:

In me thou see'st the glowing of such fire,
That on the ashes of his youth doth lie
As the deathbed whereon it must expire,
Consumed with that which it was nourish'd by:

— This thou perceiv'st, which makes thy love more strong,
To love that well which thou must leave ere long.

W. Shakespeare

39
MEMORY

When to the sessions of sweet silent thought
I summon up remembrance of things past,
I sigh the lack of many a thing I sought,
And with old woes new wail my dear time's waste;

Then can I drown an eye, unused to flow,
For precious friends hid in death's dateless night,
And weep afresh love's long-since-cancel'd woe,
And moan the expense of many a vanish'd sight.

Then can I grieve at grievances foregone,
And heavily from woe to woe tell o'er
The sad account of fore-bemoanéd moan,
Which I new pay as if not paid before:

— But if the while I think on thee, dear Friend,
All losses are restored, and sorrows end.

W. Shakespeare

40
SLEEP

Come, Sleep: O Sleep! the certain knot of peace,
The baiting place of wit, the balm of woe,
The poor man's wealth, the prisoner's release,
Th' indifferent judge between the high and low;

With shield of proof shield me from out the prease
Of those fierce darts Despair at me doth throw:
O make in me those civil wars to cease;
I will good tribute pay, if thou do so.

Take thou of me smooth pillows, sweetest bed,
A chamber deaf of noise and blind of light,
A rosy garland and a weary head:
And if these things, as being thine in right,

Move not thy heavy grace, thou shalt in me,
Livelier than elsewhere, Stella's image see.

Sir P. Sidney

41
REVOLUTIONS

Like as the waves make towards the pebbled shore
So do our minutes hasten to their end;
Each changing place with that which goes before,
In sequent toil all forwards do contend.

Nativity, once in the main of light,
Crawls to maturity, wherewith being crown'd,

Crooked eclipses 'gainst his glory fight,
And Time that gave, doth now his gift confound.

Time doth transfix the flourish set on youth,
And delves the parallels in beauty's brow;
Feeds on the rarities of nature's truth,
And nothing stands but for his scythe to mow: —
And yet, to times in hope, my verse shall stand
Praising Thy worth, despite his cruel hand.

W. Shakespeare

42

Farewell! thou art too dear for my possessing,
And like enough thou know'st thy estimate:
The charter of thy worth gives thee releasing;
My bonds in thee are all determinate.

For how do I hold thee but by thy granting?
And for that riches where is my deserving?
The cause of this fair gift in me is wanting,
And so my patent back again is swerving.

Thyself thou gav'st, thy own worth then not knowing,
Or me, to whom thou gav'st it, else mistaking;
So thy great gift, upon misprision growing,
Comes home again, on better judgment making.

Thus have I had thee as a dream doth flatter;
In sleep, a king; but waking, no such matter.

W. Shakespeare

43

THE LIFE WITHOUT PASSION

They that have power to hurt, and will do none,
That do not do the thing they most do show,
Who, moving others, are themselves as stone,
Unmovéd, cold, and to temptation slow, —

They rightly do inherit heaven's graces,
And husband nature's riches from expense;

They are the lords and owners of their faces,
Others, but stewards of their excellence.

The summer's flower is to the summer sweet,
Though to itself it only live and die;
But if that flower with base infection meet,
The basest weed outbraves his dignity:

For sweetest things turn sourest by their deeds;
Lilies that fester smell far worse than weeds.

W. Shakespeare

44
THE LOVER'S APPEAL

And wilt thou leave me thus?
Say nay! say nay! for shame,
To save thee from the blame
Of all my grief and grame.
And wilt thou leave me thus?
Say nay! say nay!

And wilt thou leave me thus,
That hath loved thee so long
In wealth and woe among:
And is thy heart so strong
As for to leave me thus?
Say nay! say nay!

And wilt thou leave me thus,
That hath given thee my heart
Never for to depart
Neither for pain nor smart:
And wilt thou leave me thus?
Say nay! say nay!

And wilt thou leave me thus,
And have no more pity
Of him that loveth thee?
Alas! thy cruelty!

And wilt thou leave me thus?
Say nay! say nay!

Sir T. Wyat

45
THE NIGHTINGALE

As it fell upon a day,
In the merry month of May,
Sitting in a pleasant shade
Which a grove of myrtles made,
Beasts did leap and birds did sing,
Trees did grow and plants did spring;
Everything did banish moan
Save the Nightingale alone.
She, poor bird, as all forlorn,
Lean'd her breast up-till a thorn,
And there sung the dolefull'st ditty
That to hear it was great pity.
Fie, fie, fie, now would she cry;
Teru, teru, by and by:
That to hear her so complain
Scarce I could from tears refrain;
For her griefs so lively shown
Made me think upon mine own.
— Ah, thought I, thou mourn'st in vain,
None takes pity on thy pain:
Senseless trees, they cannot hear thee,
Ruthless beasts, they will not cheer thee;
King Pandion, he is dead,
All thy friends are lapp'd in lead:
All thy fellow birds do sing
Careless of thy sorrowing:
Even so, poor bird, like thee
None alive will pity me.

R. Barnefield

46

Care-charmer Sleep, son of the sable Night,
Brother to Death, in silent darkness born,

Relieve my languish, and restore the light;
With dark forgetting of my care return.

And let the day be time enough to mourn
The shipwreck of my ill-adventured youth:
Let waking eyes suffice to wail their scorn,
Without the torment of the night's untruth.

Cease, dreams, the images of day-desires,
To model forth the passions of the morrow;
Never let rising Sun approve you liars,
To add more grief to aggravate my sorrow:

Still let me sleep, embracing clouds in vain,
And never wake to feel the day's disdain.

S. Daniel

47

The nightingale, as soon as April bringeth
Unto her rested sense a perfect waking,
While late-bare earth, proud of new clothing, springeth,
Sings out her woes, a thorn her songbook making;
And mournfully bewailing,
Her throat in tunes expresseth
What grief her breast oppresseth
For Tereus' force on her chaste will prevailing.

O Philomela fair, O take some gladness,
That here is juster cause of plaintful sadness:
Thine earth now springs, mine fadeth;
Thy thorn without, my thorn my heart invadeth.

Alas, she hath no other cause of anguish
But Tereus' love, on her by strong hand wroken,
Wherein she suffering, all her spirits languish,
Full womanlike complains her will was broken.
But I, who, daily craving,
Cannot have to content me,
Have more cause to lament me,
Since wanting is more woe than too much having.

O Philomela fair, O take some gladness
That here is juster cause of plaintful sadness:
Thine earth now springs, mine fadeth;
Thy thorn without, my thorn my heart invadeth.

Sir P. Sidney

48

FRUSTRA

Take, O take those lips away
That so sweetly were forsworn,
And those eyes, the break of day,
Lights that do mislead the morn:
But my kisses bring again,
Bring again —
Seals of love, but seal'd in vain,
Seal'd in vain!

W. Shakespeare

49

LOVE'S FAREWELL

Since there's no help, come let us kiss and part, —
Nay I have done, you get no more of me;
And I am glad, yea, glad with all my heart,
That thus so cleanly I myself can free;

Shake hands forever, cancel all our vows,
And when we meet at any time again,
Be it not seen in either of our brows
That we one jot of former love retain.

Now at the last gasp of love's latest breath,
When his pulse failing, passion speechless lies,
When faith is kneeling by his bed of death,
And innocence is closing up his eyes.

— Now if thou would'st, when all have given him over,
From death to life thou might'st him yet recover!

M. Drayton

50

IN IMAGINE PERTRANSIT HOMO

Follow thy fair sun, unhappy shadow!
Though thou be black as night
And she made all of light,
Yet follow thy fair sun, unhappy shadow!

Follow her, whose light thy light depriveth!
Though here thou liv'st disgraced,
And she in heaven is placed,
Yet follow her whose light the world reviveth!

Follow those pure beams, whose beauty burneth,
That so have scorchéd thee
As thou still black must be
Till her kind beams thy black to brightness turneth.

Follow her, while yet her glory shineth!
There comes a luckless night
That will dim all her light;
— And this the black unhappy shade divineth.

Follow still, since so thy fates ordainéd!
The sun must have his shade,
Till both at once do fade, —
The sun still proved, the shadow still disdainéd.

T. Campion

51

BLIND LOVE

O me! what eyes hath Love put in my head
Which have no correspondence with true sight:
Or if they have, where is my judgment fled
That censures falsely what they see aright?

If that be fair whereon my false eyes dote,
What means the world to say it is not so?
If it be not, then love doth well denote
Love's eye is not so true as all men's: No,

How can it? O how can love's eye be true,
That is so vexed with watching and with tears?
No marvel then though I mistake my view:
The sun itself sees not till heaven clears.

O cunning Love! with tears thou keep'st me blind,
Lest eyes well-seeing thy foul faults should find!

W. Shakespeare

52

Sleep, angry beauty, sleep and fear not me!
For who a sleeping lion dares provoke?
It shall suffice me here to sit and see
Those lips shut up that never kindly spoke:
What sight can more content a lover's mind
Than beauty seeming harmless, if not kind?

My words have charm'd her, for secure she sleeps,
Though guilty much of wrong done to my love;
And in her slumber, see! she close-eyed weeps:
Dreams often more than waking passions move.
Plead, Sleep, my cause, and make her soft like thee:
That she in peace may wake and pity me.

T. Campion

53

THE UNFAITHFUL SHEPHERDESS

While that the sun with his beams hot
Scorchéd the fruits in vale and mountain,
Philon the shepherd, late forgot,
Sitting beside a crystal fountain,
In shadow of a green oak tree
Upon his pipe this song play'd he:
Adieu, Love, adieu, Love, untrue Love,
Untrue Love, untrue Love, adieu, Love;
Your mind is light, soon lost for new love.

So long as I was in your sight
I was your heart, your soul, and treasure;

And evermore you sobb'd and sigh'd
Burning in flames beyond all measure:
— Three days endured your love to me,
And it was lost in other three!
Adieu, Love, adieu, Love, untrue Love,
Untrue Love, untrue Love, adieu, Love;
Your mind is light, soon lost for new love.

Another Shepherd you did see
To whom your heart was soon enchainéd;
Full soon your love was leapt from me,
Full soon my place he had obtainéd.
Soon came a third, your love to win,
And we were out and he was in.
Adieu, Love, adieu, Love, untrue Love,
Untrue Love, untrue Love, adieu, Love;
Your mind is light, soon lost for new love.

Sure you have made me passing glad
That you your mind so soon removéd,
Before that I the leisure had
To choose you for my best belovéd:
For all your love was past and done
Two days before it was begun: —
Adieu, Love, adieu, Love, untrue Love,
Untrue Love, untrue Love, adieu, Love;
Your mind is light, soon lost for new love.

Anon.

54
ADVICE TO A LOVER

The sea hath many thousand sands,
The sun hath motes as many,
The sky is full of stars, and Love
As full of woes as any:
Believe me, that do know the elf,
And make no trial by thyself!

It is in truth a pretty toy
For babes to play withal: —
But O! the honeys of our youth
Are oft our age's gall!
Self-proof in time will make thee know
He was a prophet told thee so;

A prophet that, Cassandra-like,
Tells truth without belief;
For headstrong Youth will run his race,
Although his goal be grief: —
Love's Martyr, when his heat is past,
Proves Care's Confessor at the last.

Anon.

55
A RENUNCIATION

Thou art not fair, for all thy red and white,
For all those rosy ornaments in thee, —
Thou art not sweet, though made of mere delight,
Nor fair, nor sweet — unless thou pity me!
I will not soothe thy fancies; thou shalt prove
That beauty is no beauty without love.

— Yet love not me, nor seek not to allure
My thoughts with beauty, were it more divine:
Thy smiles and kisses I cannot endure,
I'll not be wrapp'd up in those arms of thine:
— Now show it, if thou be a woman right —
Embrace and kiss and love me in despite!

T. Campion

56

Blow, blow, thou winter wind,
Thou art not so unkind
As man's ingratitude;
Thy tooth is not so keen
Because thou art not seen,
Although thy breath be rude.

Heigh ho! sing heigh ho! unto the green holly:
Most friendship is feigning, most loving mere folly:
Then, heigh ho! the holly!
This life is most jolly.

Freeze, freeze, thou bitter sky,
Thou dost not bite so nigh
As benefits forgot:
Though thou the waters warp,
Thy sting is not so sharp
As friend remember'd not.
Heigh ho! sing heigh ho! unto the green holly:
Most friendship is feigning, most loving mere folly:
Then, heigh ho! the holly!
This life is most jolly.

W. Shakespeare

57
A SWEET LULLABY

Come little babe, come silly soul,
Thy father's shame, thy mother's grief,
Born as I doubt to all our dole,
And to thy self unhappy chief:
Sing Lullaby and lap it warm,
Poor soul that thinks no creature harm.

Thou little think'st and less dost know,
The cause of this thy mother's moan,
Thou want'st the wit to wail her woe,
And I myself am all alone:
Why dost thou weep? why dost thou wail?
And knowest not yet what thou dost ail.

Come little wretch, ah silly heart,
Mine only joy, what can I more?
If there be any wrong thy smart
That may the destinies implore:
'Twas I, I say, against my will,
I wail the time, but be thou still.

And dost thou smile, oh thy sweet face!
Would God Himself He might thee see,
No doubt thou would'st soon purchase grace,
I know right well, for thee and me:
But come to mother, babe, and play,
For father false is fled away.

Sweet boy, if it by fortune chance,
Thy father home again to send,
If death do strike me with his lance,
Yet mayst thou me to him commend:
If any ask thy mother's name,
Tell how by love she purchased blame.

Then will his gentle heart soon yield,
I know him of a noble mind,
Although a Lion in the field,
A Lamb in town thou shalt him find:
Ask blessing, babe, be not afraid,
His sugar'd words hath me betray'd.

Then mayst thou joy and be right glad,
Although in woe I seem to moan,
Thy father is no rascal lad,
A noble youth of blood and bone:
His glancing looks, if he once smile,
Right honest women may beguile.

Come, little boy, and rock asleep,
Sing lullaby and be thou still;
I that can do naught else but weep,
Will sit by thee and wail my fill:
God bless my babe, and lullaby
From this thy father's quality!

Anon.

58

With how sad steps, O Moon, thou climb'st the skies!
How silently, and with how wan a face!

What, may it be that e'en in heavenly place
That busy archer his sharp arrows tries!

Sure, if that long-with-love-acquainted eyes
Can judge of love, thou feel'st a lover's case,
I read it in thy looks; thy languish'd grace,
To me, that feel the like, thy state descries.

Then, e'en of fellowship, O Moon, tell me,
Is constant love deem'd there but want of wit?
Are beauties there as proud as here they be?
Do they above love to be loved, and yet
Those lovers scorn whom that love doth possess?
Do they call virtue, there, ungratefulness?

Sir P. Sidney

59
O CRUDELIS AMOR

When thou must home to shades of underground,
And there arrived, a new admired guest,
The beauteous spirits do engirt thee round,
White Iopé, blithe Helen, and the rest,
To hear the stories of thy finish'd love
From that smooth tongue whose music hell can move;

Then wilt thou speak of banqueting delights,
Of masques and revels which sweet youth did make,
Of tourneys and great challenges of Knights,
And all these triumphs for thy beauty's sake:
When thou hast told these honors done to thee,
Then tell, O tell, how thou didst murder me!

T. Campion

60
SEPHESTIA'S SONG TO HER CHILD

Weep not, my wanton, smile upon my knee;
When thou art old, there's grief enough for thee.
Mother's wag, pretty boy,
Father's sorrow, father's joy;

When thy father first did see
Such a boy by him and me,
He was glad, I was woe,
Fortune changéd made him so,
When he left his pretty boy
Last his sorrow, first his joy.

Weep not, my wanton, smile upon my knee;
When thou art old, there's grief enough for thee.
Streaming tears that never stint,
Like pearl drops from a flint,
Fell by course from his eyes,
That one another's place supplies;
Thus he grieved in every part,
Tears of blood fell from his heart,
When he left his pretty boy,
Father's sorrow, father's joy.

Weep not, my wanton, smile upon my knee;
When thou art old, there's grief enough for thee.
The wanton smiled, father wept,
Mother cried, baby leapt;
More he crow'd, more we cried,
Nature could not sorrow hide:
He must go, he must kiss
Child and mother, baby bless,
For he left his pretty boy,
Father's sorrow, father's joy.
Weep not, my wanton, smile upon my knee,
When thou art old, there's grief enough for thee.

R. Greene

61

A LAMENT

My thoughts hold mortal strife;
I do detest my life,
And with lamenting cries
Peace to my soul to bring
Oft call that prince which here doth monarchize:

— But he, grim grinning King,
Who caitiffs scorns, and doth the blest surprise,
Late having deck'd with beauty's rose his tomb,
Disdains to crop a weed, and will not come.

W. Drummond

62

DIRGE OF LOVE

Come away, come away, Death,
And in sad cypress let me be laid;
Fly away, fly away, breath;
I am slain by a fair cruel maid.
My shroud of white, stuck all with yew,
O prepare it!
My part of death, no one so true
Did share it.

Not a flower, not a flower sweet
On my black coffin let there be strown;
Not a friend, not a friend greet
My poor corpse, where my bones shall be thrown:
A thousand thousand sighs to save,
Lay me, O where
Sad true lover never find my grave,
To weep there.

W. Shakespeare

63

TO HIS LUTE

My lute, be as thou wert when thou didst grow
With thy green mother in some shady grove,
When immelodious winds but made thee move,
And birds their ramage did on thee bestow.

Since that dear Voice which did thy sounds approve,
Which wont in such harmonious strains to flow,
Is reft from Earth to tune those spheres above,
What art thou but a harbinger of woe?

Thy pleasing notes be pleasing notes no more,
But orphans' wailings to the fainting ear;
Each stroke a sigh, each sound draws forth a tear;
For which be silent as in woods before:

Or if that any hand to touch thee deign,
Like widow'd turtle, still her loss complain.

W. Drummond

64
FIDELE

Fear no more the heat o' the sun
Nor the furious winter's rages;
Thou thy worldly task hast done,
Home art gone and ta'en thy wages.
Golden lads and girls all must,
As chimney sweepers, come to dust.

Fear no more the frown o' the great,
Thou art past the tyrant's stroke;
Care no more to clothe and eat;
To thee the reed is as the oak:
The scepter, learning, physic, must
All follow this, and come to dust.

Fear no more the lightning flash
Nor the all-dreaded thunderstone;
Fear not slander, censure rash;
Thou hast finish'd joy and moan:
All lovers young, all lovers must
Consign to thee, and come to dust.

W. Shakespeare

65
A SEA DIRGE

Full fathom five thy father lies:
Of his bones are coral made;
Those are pearls that were his eyes:
Nothing of him that doth fade,

But doth suffer a sea-change
Into something rich and strange.
Sea nymphs hourly ring his knell:
Hark! now I hear them, —
Ding, dong, bell.

W. Shakespeare

66
A LAND DIRGE

Call for the robin-redbreast and the wren,
Since o'er shady groves they hover
And with leaves and flowers do cover
The friendless bodies of unburied men.
Call unto his funeral dole
The ant, the field mouse, and the mole
To rear him hillocks that shall keep him warm
And (when gay tombs are robb'd) sustain no harm;
But keep the wolf far thence, that's foe to men,
For with his nails he'll dig them up again.

J. Webster

67
POST MORTEM

If Thou survive my well-contented day
When that churl Death my bones with dust shall cover,
And shalt by fortune once more resurvey
These poor rude lines of thy deceaséd lover;

Compare them with the bettering of the time,
And though they be outstripp'd by every pen,
Reserve them for my love, not for their rhyme
Exceeded by the height of happier men.

O then vouchsafe me but this loving thought —
"Had my friend's Muse grown with this growing age,
A dearer birth than this his love had brought,
To march in ranks of better equipage:

But since he died, and poets better prove,
Theirs for their style I'll read, his for his love."

W. Shakespeare

68

THE TRIUMPH OF DEATH

No longer mourn for me when I am dead
Than you shall hear the surly sullen bell
Give warning to the world, that I am fled
From this vile world, with vilest worms to dwell;

Nay, if you read this line, remember not
The hand that writ it; for I love you so,
That I in your sweet thoughts would be forgot
If thinking on me then should make you woe.

O if, I say, you look upon this verse
When I perhaps compounded am with clay,
Do not so much as my poor name rehearse,
But let your love even with my life decay;

Lest the wise world should look into your moan,
And mock you with me after I am gone.

W. Shakespeare

69

YOUNG LOVE

Tell me where is Fancy bred,
Or in the heart, or in the head?
How begot, how nourishéd?
Reply, reply.

It is engender'd in the eyes;
With gazing fed; and Fancy dies
In the cradle where it lies:
Let us all ring Fancy's knell;
I'll begin it, — Ding, dong, bell.
— Ding, dong, bell.

W. Shakespeare

70
A DILEMMA

Lady, when I behold the roses sprouting
Which clad in damask mantles deck the arbors,
And then behold your lips where sweet love harbors,
My eyes present me with a double doubting:
For viewing both alike, hardly my mind supposes
Whether the roses be your lips, or your lips the roses.

Anon.

71
ROSALYND'S MADRIGAL

Love in my bosom, like a bee,
Doth suck his sweet;
Now with his wings he plays with me,
Now with his feet.
Within mine eyes he makes his nest,
His bed amidst my tender breast;
My kisses are his daily feast,
And yet he robs me of my rest:
Ah! wanton, will ye?

And if I sleep, then percheth he
With pretty flight,
And makes his pillow of my knee
The livelong night.
Strike I my lute, he tunes the string;
He music plays if so I sing;
He lends me every lovely thing,
Yet cruel he my heart doth sting:
Whist, wanton, will ye?

Else I with roses every day
Will whip you hence,
And bind you, when you long to play,
For your offence;
I'll shut my eyes to keep you in;
I'll make you fast it for your sin;

I'll count your power not worth a pin;
— Alas! what hereby shall I win,
If he gainsay me?

What if I beat the wanton boy
With many a rod?
He will repay me with annoy,
Because a god.
Then sit thou safely on my knee,
And let thy bower my bosom be;
Lurk in mine eyes, I like of thee,
O Cupid! so thou pity me,
Spare not, but play thee!

T. Lodge

72

CUPID AND CAMPASPÉ

Cupid and my Campaspé play'd
At cards for kisses; Cupid paid:
He stakes his quiver, bow, and arrows
His mother's doves, and team of sparrows;
Loses them too; then down he throws
The coral of his lip, the rose
Growing on's cheek (but none knows how);
With these, the crystal of his brow,
And then the dimple on his chin;
All these did my Campaspé win:
And last he set her both his eyes —
She won, and Cupid blind did rise.
O Love! has she done this to thee?
What shall, alas! become of me?

J. Lyly

73

Pack, clouds, away, and welcome day,
With night we banish sorrow;
Sweet air blow soft, mount larks aloft
To give my Love good morrow!

Wings from the wind to please her mind,
Notes from the lark I'll borrow;
Bird, prune thy wing, nightingale sing,
To give my Love good morrow;
To give my Love good morrow
Notes from them both I'll borrow.

Wake from thy nest, Robin-red-breast,
Sing, birds, in every furrow;
And from each hill, let music shrill
Give my fair Love good morrow!
Blackbird and thrush in every bush,
Stare, linnet, and cock sparrow!
You pretty elves, amongst yourselves
Sing my fair Love good morrow;
To give my Love good morrow
Sing, birds, in every furrow!

T. Heywood

74
PROTHALAMION

Calm was the day, and through the trembling air
Sweet-breathing Zephyrus did softly play —
A gentle spirit, that lightly did delay
Hot Titan's beams, which then did glister fair;
When I (whom sullen care,
Through discontent of my long fruitless stay
In princes' court, and expectation vain
Of idle hopes, which still do fly away
Like empty shadows, did afflict my brain)
Walk'd forth to ease my pain
Along the shore of silver-streaming Thames;
Whose rutty bank, the which his river hems,
Was painted all with variable flowers,
And all the meads adorn'd with dainty gems
Fit to deck maidens' bowers,
And crown their paramours
Against the bridal day, which is not long:
Sweet Thames! run softly, till I end my song.

There in a meadow by the river's side
A flock of nymphs I chancéd to espy,
All lovely daughters of the flood thereby,
With goodly greenish locks all loose untied
As each had been a bride;
And each one had a little wicker basket
Made of fine twigs, entrailéd curiously.
In which they gather'd flowers to fill their flasket,
And with fine fingers cropt full feateously
The tender stalks on high.
Of every sort which in that meadow grew
They gather'd some; the violet, pallid blue,
The little daisy that at evening closes,
The virgin lily and the primrose true,
With store of vermeil roses,
To deck their bridegrooms' posies
Against the bridal day, which was not long:
Sweet Thames! run softly, till I end my song.

With that I saw two Swans of goodly hue
Come softly swimming down along the Lee;
Two fairer birds I yet did never see;
The snow which doth the top of Pindus strow
Did never whiter show,
Nor Jove himself, when he a swan would be
For love of Leda, whiter did appear:
Yet Leda was (they say) as white as he,
Yet not so white as these, nor nothing near;
So purely white they were
That even the gentle stream, the which them bare,
Seem'd foul to them, and bade his billows spare
To wet their silken feathers, lest they might Soil their fair plumes with water not so fair,
And mar their beauties bright
That shone as Heaven's light
Against their bridal day, which was not long:
Sweet Thames! run softly, till I end my song.

Eftsoons the nymphs, which now had flowers their fill,
Ran all in haste to see that silver brood

As they came floating on the crystal flood;
Whom when they saw, they stood amazéd still
Their wondering eyes to fill;
Them seem'd they never saw a sight so fair
Of fowls, so lovely, that they sure did deem
Them heavenly born, or to be that same pair
Which through the sky draw Venus' silver team:
For sure they did not seem
To be begot of any earthly seed,
But rather Angels, or of Angels' breed;
Yet were they bred of summer's heat, they say,
In sweetest season, when each flower and weed
The earth did fresh array;
So fresh they seem'd as day,
Ev'n as their bridal day, which was not long:
  Sweet Thames! run softly, till I end my song.

Then forth they all out of their baskets drew
Great store of flowers, the honor of the field,
That to the sense did fragrant odors yield,
All which upon those goodly birds they threw
And all the waves did strew,
That like old Peneus' waters they did seem
When down along by pleasant Tempe's shore
Scatter'd with flowers, through Thessaly they stream,
That they appear, through lilies' plenteous store,
Like a bride's chamber floor.
Two of those nymphs meanwhile two garlands bound
Of freshest flowers which in that mead they found,
The which presenting all in trim array,
Their snowy foreheads therewithal they crown'd;
Whilst one did sing this lay
Prepared against that day,
Against their bridal day, which was not long:
  Sweet Thames! run softly, till I end my song.

"Ye gentle birds! the world's fair ornament,
And Heaven's glory, whom this happy hour
Doth lead unto your lovers' blissful bower,
Joy may you have, and gentle heart's content

Of your love's couplement;
And let fair Venus, that is queen of love,
With her heart-quelling son upon you smile,
Whose smile, they say, hath virtue to remove
All love's dislike, and friendship's faulty guile
Forever to assoil.
Let endless peace your steadfast hearts accord,
And blesséd plenty wait upon your board;
And let your bed with pleasures chaste abound,
That fruitful issue may to you afford
Which may your foes confound,
And make your joys redound
Upon your bridal day, which is not long:
Sweet Thames! run softly, till I end my song."

So ended she; and all the rest around
To her redoubled that her undersong,
Which said their bridal day should not be long:
And gentle Echo from the neighbor ground
Their accents did resound.
So forth those joyous birds did pass along
Adown the Lee that to them murmur'd low,
As he would speak but that he lack'd a tongue;
Yet did by signs his glad affection show,
Making his stream run slow.
And all the fowl which in his flood did dwell
'Gan flock about these twain, that did excel
The rest, so far as Cynthia doth shend
The lesser stars. So they, enrangéd well,
Did on those two attend,
And their best service lend
Against their wedding day, which was not long:
Sweet Thames! run softly, till I end my song.

At length they all to merry London came,
To merry London, my most kindly nurse,
That to me gave this life's first native source,
Though from another place I take my name,
An house of ancient fame:
There when they came whereas those bricky towers

The which on Thames' broad agéd back do ride,
Where now the studious lawyers have their bowers,
There whilom wont the Templar knights to bide,
Till they decay'd through pride;
Next whereunto there stands a stately place,
Where oft I gainéd gifts and goodly grace
Of that great lord, which therein wont to dwell,
Whose want too well now feels my friendless case;
But ah! here fits not well
Old woes, but joys to tell
Against the bridal day, which is not long:
Sweet Thames! run softly, till I end my song.

Yet therein now doth lodge a noble peer,
Great England's glory and the world's wide wonder,
Whose dreadful name late through all Spain did thunder,
And Hercules' two pillars standing near
Did make to quake and fear:
Fair branch of honor, flower of chivalry!
That fillest England with thy triumph's fame,
Joy have thou of thy noble victory,
And endless happiness of thine own name
That promiseth the same;
That through thy prowess and victorious arms
Thy country may be freed from foreign harms,
And great Elisa's glorious name may ring
Through all the world, fill'd with thy wide alarms,
Which some brave Muse may sing
To ages following:
Upon the bridal day, which is not long:
Sweet Thames! run softly, till I end my song.

From those high towers this noble lord issúing
Like radiant Hesper, when his golden hair
In th' ocean billows he hath bathéd fair,
Descended to the river's open viewing
With a great train ensuing.
Above the rest were goodly to be seen
Two gentle knights of lovely face and feature,
Beseeming well the bower of any queen,

With gifts of wit and ornaments of nature,
Fit for so goodly stature,
That like the twins of Jove they seem'd in sight
Which deck the baldric of the Heavens bright;
They two, forth pacing to the river's side,
Received those two fair brides, their love's delight;
Which, at th' appointed tide,
Each one did make his bride
Against their bridal day, which is not long:
Sweet Thames! run softly, till I end my song.

E. Spenser

75
THE HAPPY HEART

Art thou poor, yet hast thou golden slumbers?
O sweet content!
Art thou rich, yet is thy mind perplex'd?
O punishment!
Dost thou laugh to see how fools are vex'd
To add to golden numbers, golden numbers?
O sweet content! O sweet, O sweet content!
Work apace, apace, apace, apace;
Honest labor bears a lovely face;
Then hey nonny nonny, hey nonny nonny!

Canst drink the waters of the crispéd spring?
O sweet content!
Swimm'st thou in wealth, yet sink'st in thine own tears?
O punishment!
Then he that patiently want's burden bears
No burden bears, but is a king, a king!
O sweet content! O sweet, O sweet content!
Work apace, apace, apace, apace;
Honest labor bears a lovely face!
Then hey nonny nonny, hey nonny nonny!

T. Dekker

76

SIC TRANSIT

Come, cheerful day, part of my life to me;
For while thou view'st me with thy fading light
Part of my life doth still depart with thee,
And I still onward haste to my last night:
Time's fatal wings do ever forward fly —
So every day we live, a day we die.

But O ye nights, ordain'd for barren rest,
How are my days deprived of life in you
When heavy sleep my soul hath dispossest,
By feignéd death life sweetly to renew!
Part of my life, in that, you life deny:
So every day we live, a day we die.

T. Campion

77

This Life, which seems so fair,
Is like a bubble blown up in the air
By sporting children's breath,
Who chase it everywhere
And strive who can most motion it bequeath.
And though it sometimes seem of its own might
Like to an eye of gold to be fix'd there,
And firm to hover in that empty height,
That only is because it is so light.
— But in that pomp it doth not long appear;
For when 'tis most admired, in a thought,
Because it erst was naught, it turns to naught.

W. Drummond

78

SOUL AND BODY

Poor Soul, the center of my sinful earth,
[Foil'd by] those rebel powers that thee array,
Why dost thou pine within, and suffer dearth,
Painting thy outward walls so costly gay?

Why so large cost, having so short a lease,
Dost thou upon thy fading mansion spend?
Shall worms, inheritors of this excess,
Eat up thy charge? is this thy body's end?

Then, Soul, live thou upon thy servant's loss
And let that pine to aggravate thy store;
Buy terms divine in selling hours of dross;
Within be fed, without be rich no more: —

So shalt thou feed on death, that feeds on men,
And death once dead, there's no more dying then.

W. Shakespeare

79

The man of life upright,
  Whose guiltless heart is free
From all dishonest deeds,
  Or thought of vanity;

The man whose silent days
  In harmless joys are spent,
Whom hopes cannot delude
  Nor sorrow discontent:

That man needs neither towers
  Nor armor for defence,
Nor secret vaults to fly
  From thunder's violence:

He only can behold
  With unaffrighted eyes
The horrors of the deep
  And terrors of the skies.

Thus scorning all the cares
  That fate or fortune brings,
He makes the heaven his book,
  His wisdom heavenly things;

Good thoughts his only friends,
His wealth a well-spent age,
The earth his sober inn
And quiet pilgrimage.

T. Campion

80

THE LESSONS OF NATURE

Of this fair volume which we World do name
If we the sheets and leaves could turn with care,
Of Him who it corrects, and did it frame,
We clear might read the art and wisdom rare:

Find out His power which wildest powers doth tame,
His providence extending everywhere,
His justice which proud rebels doth not spare,
In every page, no period of the same.

But silly we, like foolish children, rest
Well pleased with color'd vellum, leaves of gold,
Fair dangling ribbons, leaving what is best,
On the great Writer's sense ne'er taking hold;

Or if by chance we stay our minds on aught,
It is some picture on the margin wrought.

W. Drummond

81

Doth then the world go thus, doth all thus move?
Is this the justice which on earth we find?
Is this that firm decree which all doth bind?
Are these your influences, Powers above?

Those souls which vice's moody mists most blind,
Blind Fortune, blindly, most their friend doth prove;
And they who thee, poor idol Virtue! love,
Ply like a feather toss'd by storm and wind.

Ah! if a Providence doth sway this all
Why should best minds groan under most distress?
Or why should pride humility make thrall,
And injuries the innocent oppress?

Heavens! hinder, stop this fate; or grant a time
When good may have, as well as bad, their prime!

W. Drummond

82
THE WORLD'S WAY

Tired with all these, for restful death I cry —
As, to behold desert a beggar born,
And needy nothing trimm'd in jollity,
And purest faith unhappily forsworn,

And gilded honor shamefully misplaced,
And maiden virtue rudely strumpeted,
And right perfection wrongfully disgraced,
And strength by limping sway disabled,

And art made tongue-tied by authority,
And folly, doctor-like, controlling skill,
And simple truth miscall'd simplicity,
And captive Good attending captain Ill: —

— Tired with all these, from these would I be gone,
Save that, to die, I leave my Love alone.

W. Shakespeare

83
A WISH

Happy were he could finish forth his fate
In some unhaunted desert, where, obscure
From all society, from love and hate
Of worldly folk, there should be sleep secure;

Then wake again, and yield God ever praise;
Content with hip, with haws, and brambleberry;
In contemplation passing still his days,
And change of holy thoughts to make him merry:

Who, when he dies, his tomb might be the bush
Where harmless robin resteth with the thrush:
— Happy were he!

R. Devereux, Earl of Essex

84
SAINT JOHN BAPTIST

The last and greatest Herald of Heaven's King
Girt with rough skins, hies to the deserts wild,
Among that savage brood the woods forth bring,
Which he more harmless found than man, and mild.

His food was locusts, and what there doth spring,
With honey that from virgin hives distill'd;
Parch'd body, hollow eyes, some uncouth thing
Made him appear, long since from earth exiled.

There burst he forth: All ye whose hopes rely
On God, with me amidst these deserts mourn,
Repent, repent, and from old errors turn!
— Who listen'd to his voice, obey'd his cry?

Only the echoes, which he made relent,
Rung from their flinty caves, Repent! Repent!

W. Drummond

BOOK SECOND

85

ODE ON THE MORNING OF CHRIST'S NATIVITY

This is the month, and this the happy morn
Wherein the Son of Heaven's Eternal King
Of wedded maid and virgin mother born,
Our great redemption from above did bring;
For so the holy sages once did sing
That He our deadly forfeit should release,
And with His Father work us a perpetual peace.

That glorious Form, that Light unsufferable,
And that far-beaming blaze of Majesty
Wherewith He wont at Heaven's high council table
To sit the midst of Trinal Unity,
He laid aside; and, here with us to be,
Forsook the courts of everlasting day,
And chose with us a darksome house of mortal clay.

Say, heavenly Muse, shall not thy sacred vein
Afford a present to the Infant God?
Hast thou no verse, no hymn, or solemn strain
To welcome Him to this His new abode,
Now while the heaven, by the sun's team untrod,
Hath took no print of the approaching light,
And all the spangled host keep watch in squadrons bright?

See how from far, upon the eastern road,
The star-led wizards haste with odors sweet:
O run, prevent them with thy humble ode
And lay it lowly at His blessed feet;
Have thou the honor first thy Lord to greet;

And join thy voice unto the Angel quire
From out His secret altar touch'd with hallow'd fire.

THE HYMN

It was the winter wild
While the heaven-born Child
All meanly wrapt in the rude manger lies;
Nature in awe to Him
Had doff'd her gaudy trim,
With her great Master so to sympathize:
It was no season then for her
To wanton with the sun, her lusty paramour.

Only with speeches fair
She woos the gentle air
To hide her guilty front with innocent snow;
And on her naked shame,
Pollute with sinful blame,
The saintly veil of maiden white to throw;
Confounded, that her Maker's eyes
Should look so near upon her foul deformities.

But He, her fears to cease,
Sent down the meek-eyed Peace;
She, crown'd with olive green, came softly sliding
Down through the turning sphere,
His ready harbinger,
With turtle wing the amorous clouds dividing;
And waving wide her myrtle wand,
She strikes a universal peace through sea and land.

No war or battle's sound
Was heard the world around:
The idle spear and shield were high uphung;
The hookéd chariot stood
Unstain'd with hostile blood;
The trumpet spake not to the arméd throng;
And kings sat still with awful eye,
As if they surely knew their sovran Lord was by.

But peaceful was the night
Wherein the Prince of Light
His reign of peace upon the earth began:
The winds, with wonder whist,
Smoothly the waters kist,
Whispering new joys to the mild oceán —
Who now hath quite forgot to rave,
While birds of calm sit brooding on the charméd wave.

The stars, with deep amaze,
Stand fix'd in steadfast gaze,
Bending one way their precious influence;
And will not take their flight
For all the morning light,
Or Lucifer that often warn'd them thence;
But in their glimmering orbs did glow
Until their Lord Himself bespake, and bid them go.

And though the shady gloom
Had given day her room,
The sun himself withheld his wonted speed,
And hid his head for shame,
As his inferior flame
The new-enlighten'd world no more should need;
He saw a greater Sun appear
Than his bright throne, or burning axletree could bear.

The shepherds on the lawn
Or ere the point of dawn
Sate simply chatting in a rustic row;
Full little thought they than
That the mighty Pan
Was kindly come to live with them below;
Perhaps their loves, or else their sheep
Was all that did their silly thoughts so busy keep: —

When such music sweet
Their hearts and ears did greet
As never was by mortal finger strook —
Divinely-warbled voice

Answering the stringéd noise,
As all their souls in blissful rapture took:
The air, such pleasure loth to lose,
With thousand echoes still prolongs each heavenly close.

Nature, that heard such sound
Beneath the hollow round
Of Cynthia's seat the airy region thrilling,
Now was almost won
To think her part was done,
And that her reign had here its last fulfilling;
She knew such harmony alone
Could hold all Heaven and Earth in happier union.

At last surrounds their sight
A globe of circular light
That with long beams the shamefaced night array'd;
The helméd Cherubim
And sworded Seraphim
Are seen in glittering ranks with wings display'd,
Harping in loud and solemn quire
With unexpressive notes, to Heaven's newborn Heir.

Such music (as 'tis said)
Before was never made
But when of old the Sons of Morning sung,
While the Creator great
His constellations set
And the well-balanced world on hinges hung;
And cast the dark foundations deep,
And bid the weltering waves their oozy channel keep.

Ring out, ye crystal spheres!
Once bless our human ears,
If ye have power to touch our senses so;
And let your silver chime
Move in melodious time;
And let the bass of heaven's deep organ blow;
And with your ninefold harmony
Make up full consort to the angelic symphony.

For if such holy song
Enwrap our fancy long,
Time will run back, and fetch the age of gold;
And speckled Vanity
Will sicken soon and die,
And leprous Sin will melt from earthly mold;
And Hell itself will pass away,
And leave her dolorous mansions to the peering day.

Yea, Truth and Justice then
Will down return to men,
Orb'd in a rainbow; and, like glories wearing,
Mercy will sit between
Throned in celestial sheen,
With radiant feet the tissued clouds down steering;
And Heaven, as at some festival,
Will open wide the gates of her high palace hall.

But wisest Fate says No;
This must not yet be so;
The Babe yet lies in smiling infancy
That on the bitter cross
Must redeem our loss;
So both Himself and us to glorify:
Yet first, to those ychain'd in sleep
The wakeful trump of doom must thunder through the deep;

With such a horrid clang
As on Mount Sinai rang
While the red fire and smoldering clouds outbrake:
The aged Earth aghast
With terror of that blast
Shall from the surface to the center shake,
When, at the world's last session,
The dreadful Judge in middle air shall spread His throne.

And then at last our bliss
Full and perfect is,
But now begins; for from this happy day

The old Dragon underground,
In straiter limits bound,
Not half so far casts his usurpéd sway;
And, wroth to see his kingdom fail,
Swinges the scaly horror of his folded tail.

The Oracles are dumb;
No voice or hideous hum
Runs through the archéd roof in words deceiving.
Apollo from his shrine
Can no more divine,
With hollow shriek the steep of Delphos leaving:
No nightly trance or breathéd spell
Inspires the pale-eyed priest from the prophetic cell.

The lonely mountains o'er
And the resounding shore
A voice of weeping heard, and loud lament;
From haunted spring and dale
Edged with poplar pale
The parting Genius is with sighing sent;
With flower-inwoven tresses torn
The Nymphs in twilight shade of tangled thickets mourn.

In consecrated earth
And on the holy hearth
The Lars and Lemurés moan with midnight plaint;
In urns, and altars round
A drear and dying sound
Affrights the Flamens at their service quaint;
And the chill marble seems to sweat,
While each peculiar Power forgoes his wonted seat.

Peor and Baalim
Forsake their temples dim,
With that twice-batter'd god of Palestine;
And moonéd Ashtaroth
Heaven's queen and mother both,
Now sits not girt with tapers' holy shine;

The Lybic Hammon shrinks his horn:
In vain the Tyrian maids their wounded Thammuz mourn.

And sullen Moloch, fled,
Hath left in shadows dread
His burning idol all of blackest hue;
In vain with cymbals' ring
They call the grisly king,
In dismal dance about the furnace blue;
The brutish gods of Nile as fast,
Isis, and Orus, and the dog Anubis, haste.

Nor is Osiris seen
In Memphian grove, or green,
Trampling the unshower'd grass with lowings loud:
Nor can he be at rest
Within his sacred chest;
Nought but profoundest Hell can be his shroud;
In vain with timbrel'd anthems dark
The sable-stoléd sorcerers bear his worshipt ark.

He feels from Juda's land
The dreaded Infant's hand;
The rays of Bethlehem blind his dusky eyn;
Nor all the gods beside Longer dare abide,
Not Typhon huge ending in snaky twine:
Our Babe, to show His Godhead true,
Can in His swaddling bands control the damnéd crew.

So, when the sun in bed
Curtain'd with cloudy red
Pillows his chin upon an orient wave,
The flocking shadows pale
Troop to the infernal jail,
Each fetter'd ghost slips to his several grave;
And the yellow-skirted fays
Fly after the night steeds, leaving their moon-loved maze.

But see! the Virgin blest
Hath laid her Babe to rest;
Time is, our tedious song should here have ending:
Heaven's youngest-teemèd star
Hath fix'd her polish'd car,
Her sleeping Lord with handmaid lamp attending:
And all about the courtly stable
Bright-harness'd Angels sit in order serviceable.

J. Milton

86

SONG FOR SAINT CECILIA'S DAY, 1687

From Harmony, from heavenly Harmony
This universal frame began:
When Nature underneath a heap
Of jarring atoms lay
And could not heave her head,
The tuneful voice was heard from high,
Arise, ye more than dead!
Then cold and hot and moist and dry
In order to their stations leap,
And Music's power obey. —
From harmony, from heavenly harmony
This universal frame began:
From harmony to harmony
Through all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in Man.

What passion cannot Music raise and quell?
When Jubal struck the chorded shell
His listening brethren stood around,
And, wondering, on their faces fell
To worship that celestial sound.
Less than a god they thought there could not dwell
Within the hollow of that shell
That spoke so sweetly and so well.
What passion cannot Music raise and quell?

The trumpet's loud clangor
Excites us to arms,

With shrill notes of anger
And mortal alarms.
The double double double beat
Of the thundering drum —
Cries "Hark! the foes come;
Charge, charge, 'tis too late to retreat!"

The soft complaining flute
In dying notes discovers
The woes of hopeless lovers,
Whose dirge is whisper'd by the warbling lute.

Sharp violins proclaim
Their jealous pangs and desperation,
Fury, frantic indignation,
Depth of pains, and height of passion
For the fair disdainful dame.

But oh! what art can teach,
What human voice can reach
The sacred organ's praise?
Notes inspiring holy love,
Notes that wing their heavenly ways
To mend the choirs above.

Orpheus could lead the savage race,
And trees unrooted left their place
Sequacious of the lyre:
But bright Cecilia raised the wonder higher:
When to her Organ vocal breath was given
An Angel heard, and straight appear'd —
Mistaking Earth for Heaven.

GRAND CHORUS

As from the power of sacred lays
The spheres began to move,
And sung the great Creator's praise
To all the blest above;
So when the last and dreadful hour

This crumbling pageant shall devour,
The trumpet shall be heard on high,
The dead shall live, the living die,
And Music shall untune the sky.

J. Dryden

87

ON THE LATE MASSACRE IN PIEDMONT

Avenge, O Lord! Thy slaughter'd saints, whose bones
Lie scatter'd on the Alpine mountains cold;
Even them who kept Thy truth so pure of old
When all our fathers worshipt stocks and stones,
Forget not: In Thy book record their groans
Who were Thy sheep, and in their ancient fold
Slain by the bloody Piemontese that roll'd
Mother with infant down the rocks. Their moans

The vales redoubled to the hills, and they
To Heaven. Their martyr'd blood and ashes sow
O'er all the Italian fields, where still doth sway

The triple Tyrant: that from these may grow
A hundredfold, who, having learnt Thy way,
Early may fly the Babylonian woe.

J. Milton

88

HORATIAN ODE UPON CROMWELL'S RETURN FROM IRELAND

The forward youth that would appear,
Must now forsake his Muses dear,
Nor in the shadows sing
His numbers languishing.

'Tis time to leave the books in dust,
And oil the unuséd armor's rust,
Removing from the wall
The corslet of the hall.

So restless Cromwell could not cease
In the inglorious arts of peace,
But through adventurous war
Urgéd his active star:

And like the three-fork'd lightning, first
Breaking the clouds where it was nurst,
Did thorough his own Side
His fiery way divide:

For 'tis all one to courage high,
The emulous, or enemy;
And with such, to inclose
Is more than to oppose;

Then burning through the air he went
And palaces and temples rent;
And Cæsar's head at last
Did through his laurels blast.

'Tis madness to resist or blame
The face of angry heaven's flame;
And if we would speak true,
Much to the Man is due

Who, from his private gardens, where
He lived reservéd and austere,
(As if his highest plot
To plant the bergamot),

Could by industrious valor climb
To ruin the great work of time,
And cast the Kingdoms old
Into another mold;

Though Justice against Fate complain,
And plead the ancient Rights in vain —
But those do hold or break
As men are strong or weak;

Nature, that hateth emptiness,
Allows of penetration less,
And therefore must make room
Where greater spirits come.

What field of all the civil war
Where his were not the deepest scar?
And Hampton shows what part
He had of wiser art,

Where, twining subtle fears with hope,
He wove a net of such a scope
That Charles himself might chase
To Carisbrook's narrow case,

That thence the Royal actor borne
The tragic scaffold might adorn:
While round the arméd bands
Did clap their bloody hands.

He nothing common did or mean
Upon that memorable scene,
But with his keener eye
The ax's edge did try;

Nor call'd the Gods, with vulgar spite,
To vindicate his helpless right;
But bow'd his comely head
Down, as upon a bed.

— This was that memorable hour
Which first assured the forcéd power:
So when they did design
The Capitol's first line,

A Bleeding Head, where they begun,
Did fright the architects to run;
And yet in that the State
Foresaw its happy fate!

And now the Irish are ashamed
To see themselves in one year tamed:
So much one man can do
That does both act and know.

They can affirm his praises best,
And have, though overcome, confest
How good he is, how just
And fit for highest trust.

Nor yet grown stiffer with command,
But still in the Republic's hand —
How fit he is to sway
That can so well obey!

He to the Commons' feet presents
A Kingdom for his first year's rents,
And (what he may) forbears
His fame, to make it theirs:

And has his sword and spoils ungirt
To lay them at the Public's skirt.
So when the falcon high
Falls heavy from the sky,

She, having kill'd, no more doth search
But on the next green bough to perch,
Where, when he first does lure,
The falconer has her sure.

— What may not then our Isle presume
While victory his crest does plume?
What may not others fear
If thus he crowns each year?

As Cæsar he, erelong, to Gaul,
To Italy an Hannibal,
And to all States not free
Shall climacteric be.

The Pict no shelter now shall find
Within his parti-color'd mind,
But from this valor sad
Shrink underneath the plaid —

Happy, if in the tufted brake
The English hunter him mistake,
Nor lay his hounds in near
The Caledonian deer.

But Thou, the War's and Fortune's son,
March indefatigably on;
And for the last effect
Still keep the sword erect:

Besides the force it has to fright
The spirits of the shady night,
The same arts that did gain
A power, must it maintain.

A. Marvell

89

LYCIDAS

(Elegy on a Friend drowned in the Irish Channel, 1637)

Yet once more, O ye laurels, and once more
Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never sere,
I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude,
And with forced fingers rude
Shatter your leaves before the mellowing year.
Bitter constraint and sad occasion dear
Compels me to disturb your season due:
For Lycidas is dead, dead ere his prime,
Young Lycidas, and hath not left his peer.
Who would not sing for Lycidas? he knew
Himself to sing, and build the lofty rime.
He must not float upon his watery bier
Unwept, and welter to the parching wind,
Without the meed of some melodious tear.

Begin then, Sisters of the sacred well
That from beneath the seat of Jove doth spring;
Begin, and somewhat loudly sweep the string.
Hence with denial vain and coy excuse:
So may some gentle Muse
With lucky words favor my destined urn;
And as he passes, turn
And bid fair peace be to my sable shroud.

For we were nursed upon the selfsame hill,
Fed the same flock by fountain, shade, and rill:
Together both, ere the high lawns appear'd
Under the opening eyelids of the Morn,
We drove afield, and both together heard
What time the gray-fly winds her sultry horn,
Battening our flocks with the fresh dews of night,
Oft till the star that rose at evening bright
Toward heaven's descent had sloped his westering wheel.
Meanwhile the rural ditties were not mute;
Temper'd to the oaten flute
Rough Satyrs danced, and Fauns with cloven heel
From the glad sound would not be absent long;
And old Damœtas loved to hear our song.

But, oh! the heavy change, now thou art gone,
Now thou art gone, and never must return!
Thee, Shepherd, thee the woods and desert caves
With wild thyme and the gadding vine o'ergrown,
And all their echoes, mourn:
The willows and the hazel copses green
Shall now no more be seen
Fanning their joyous leaves to thy soft lays: —
As killing as the canker to the rose,
Or taintworm to the weanling herds that graze,
Or frost to flowers, that their gay wardrobe wear
When first the whitethorn blows;
Such, Lycidas, thy loss to shepherd's ear.

Where were ye, Nymphs, when the remorseless deep
Closed o'er the head of your loved Lycidas?

For neither were ye playing on the steep
Where your old bards, the famous Druids, lie,
Nor on the shaggy top of Mona high,
Nor yet where Deva spreads her wizard stream:
Ay me! I fondly dream —
Had ye been there . . . For what could that have done?
What could the Muse herself that Orpheus bore,
The Muse herself, for her enchanting son,
Whom universal nature did lament,
When by the rout that made the hideous roar
His gory visage down the stream was sent,
Down the swift Hebrus to the Lesbian shore?

Alas! what boots it with uncessant care
To tend the homely, slighted, shepherd's trade
And strictly meditate the thankless Muse?
Were it not better done, as others use,
To sport with Amaryllis in the shade,
Or with the tangles of Neæra's hair?
Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise
(That last infirmity of noble mind)
To scorn delights, and live laborious days;
But the fair guerdon when we hope to find,
And think to burst out into sudden blaze,
Comes the blind Fury with the abhorréd shears
And slits the thin-spun life. "But not the praise"
Phœbus replied, and touch'd my trembling ears;
"Fame is no plant that grows on mortal soil,
Nor in the glistering foil
Set off to the world, nor in broad rumor lies:
But lives and spreads aloft by those pure eyes
And perfect witness of all-judging Jove;
As he pronounces lastly on each deed,
Of so much fame in heaven expect thy meed."

O fountain Arethuse, and thou honor'd flood
Smooth-sliding Mincius, crown'd with vocal reeds,
That strain I heard was of a higher mood.
But now my oat proceeds,
And listens to the herald of the sea
That came in Neptune's plea;

He ask'd the waves, and ask'd the felon winds,
What hard mishap hath doom'd this gentle swain?
And question'd every gust of rugged wings
That blows from off each beakéd promontory:
They knew not of his story;
And sage Hippotadés their answer brings,
That not a blast was from his dungeon stray'd;
The air was calm, and on the level brine
Sleek Panopé with all her sisters play'd.
It was that fatal and perfidious bark
Built in the eclipse, and rigg'd with curses dark,
That sunk so low that sacred head of thine.

Next Camus, reverend sire, went footing slow,
His mantle hairy, and his bonnet sedge
Inwrought with figures dim, and on the edge
Like to that sanguine flower inscribed with woe:
"Ah! who hath reft," quoth he, "my dearest pledge!"
Last came, and last did go
The Pilot of the Galilean lake;
Two massy keys he bore of metals twain
(The golden opes, the iron shuts amain);
He shook his mitered locks, and stern bespake:
"How well could I have spared for thee, young swain,
Enow of such, as for their bellies' sake
Creep and intrude and climb into the fold!
Of other care they little reckoning make
Than how to scramble at the shearers' feast,
And shove away the worthy bidden guest.
Blind mouths! that scarce themselves know how to hold
A sheephook, or have learn'd aught else the least
That to the faithful herdman's art belongs!
What recks it them? What need they? They are sped;
And when they list, their lean and flashy songs
Grate on their scrannel pipes of wretched straw;
The hungry sheep look up, and are not fed,
But swoln with wind and the rank mist they draw
Rot inwardly, and foul contagion spread:
Besides what the grim wolf with privy paw
Daily devours apace, and nothing said:

— But that two-handed engine at the door
Stands ready to smite once, and smite no more."

Return, Alphéus; the dread voice is past
That shrunk thy streams; return, Sicilian Muse,
And call the vales, and bid them hither cast
Their bells and flowerets of a thousand hues.
Ye valleys low, where the mild whispers use
Of shades, and wanton winds, and gushing brooks
On whose fresh lap the swart star sparely looks;
Throw hither all your quaint enamel'd eyes
That on the green turf suck the honey'd showers
And purple all the ground with vernal flowers.
Bring the rathe primrose that forsaken dies,
The tufted crow-toe, and pale jessamine,
The white pink, and the pansy freak'd with jet,
The glowing violet,
The musk rose, and the well-attired woodbine,
With cowslips wan that hang the pensive head,
And every flower that sad embroidery wears:
Bid amaranthus all his beauty shed,
And daffodillies fill their cups with tears
To strew the laureat hearse where Lycid lies.
For so to interpose a little ease,
Let our frail thoughts dally with false surmise: —
Ay me! whilst thee the shores and sounding seas
Wash far away, — where'er thy bones are hurl'd,
Whether beyond the stormy Hebrides
Where thou perhaps, under the whelming tide,
Visitest the bottom of the monstrous world;
Or whether thou, to our moist vows denied,
Sleep'st by the fable of Bellerus old,
Where the great Vision of the guarded mount
Looks toward Namancos and Bayona's hold,
— Look homeward, Angel, now, and melt with ruth.
— And, O ye dolphins, waft the hapless youth!

Weep no more, woeful shepherds, weep no more,
For Lycidas, your sorrow, is not dead,
Sunk though he be beneath the watery floor:

So sinks the day star in the ocean bed,
And yet anon repairs his drooping head
And tricks his beams, and with new-spangled ore
Flames in the forehead of the morning sky:
So Lycidas sunk low, but mounted high
Through the dear might of Him that walk'd the waves;
Where, other groves and other streams along,
With nectar pure his oozy locks he laves,
And hears the unexpressive nuptial song
In the blest kingdoms meek of joy and love.
There entertain him all the Saints above
In solemn troops, and sweet societies,
That sing, and singing, in their glory move,
And wipe the tears forever from his eyes.
Now, Lycidas, the shepherds weep no more;
Henceforth thou art the Genius of the shore
In thy large recompense, and shalt be good
To all that wander in that perilous flood.

Thus sang the uncouth swain to the oaks and rills,
While the still morn went out with sandals gray;
He touch'd the tender stops of various quills,
With eager thought warbling his Doric lay:
And now the sun had stretch'd out all the hills,
And now was dropt into the western bay:
At last he rose, and twitch'd his mantle blue:
To-morrow to fresh woods, and pastures new.

J. Milton

90

ON THE TOMBS IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY

Mortality, behold and fear
What a change of flesh is here!
Think how many royal bones
Sleep within these heaps of stones;
Here they lie, had realms and lands,
Who now want strength to stir their hands,
Where from their pulpits seal'd with dust
They preach, "In greatness is no trust."

Here's an acre sown indeed
With the richest royalest seed
That the earth did e'er suck in
Since the first man died for sin:
Here the bones of birth have cried
"Though gods they were, as men they died!"
Here are sands, ignoble things,
Dropt from the ruin'd sides of kings:
Here's a world of pomp and state
Buried in dust, once dead by fate.

F. Beaumont

91

THE LAST CONQUEROR

Victorious men of earth, no more
Proclaim how wide your empires are;
Though you bind-in every shore
And your triumphs reach as far
As night or day,
Yet you, proud monarchs, must obey
And mingle with forgotten ashes, when
Death calls ye to the crowd of common men.

Devouring Famine, Plague, and War
Each able to undo mankind,
Death's servile emissaries are;
Nor to these alone confined,
He hath at will
More quaint and subtle ways to kill;
A smile or kiss, as he will use the art,
Shall have the cunning skill to break a heart.

J. Shirley

92

DEATH THE LEVELER

The glories of our blood and state
Are shadows, not substantial things;
There is no armor against fate;
Death lays his icy hand on kings:

Scepter and Crown
Must tumble down,
And in the dust be equal made
With the poor crooked scythe and spade.

Some men with swords may reap the field,
And plant fresh laurels where they kill:
But their strong nerves at last must yield;
They tame but one another still:
Early or late
They stoop to fate,
And must give up their murmuring breath
When they, pale captives, creep to death.

The garlands wither on your brow;
Then boast no more your mighty deeds;
Upon Death's purple altar now
See where the victor-victim bleeds:
Your heads must come
To the cold tomb;
Only the actions of the just
Smell sweet, and blossom in their dust.

J. Shirley

93
WHEN THE ASSAULT WAS INTENDED TO THE CITY

Captain, or Colonel, or Knight in Arms,
Whose chance on these defenseless doors may seize,
If deed of honor did thee ever please,
Guard them, and him within protect from harms.

He can requite thee; for he knows the charms
That call fame on such gentle acts as these,
And he can spread thy name o'er lands and seas,
Whatever clime the sun's bright circle warms.

Lift not thy spear against the Muses' bower:
The great Emathian conqueror bid spare

The house of Pindarus, when temple and tower
Went to the ground: and the repeated air
Of sad Electra's poet had the power
To save the Athenian walls from ruin bare.

J. Milton

94
ON HIS BLINDNESS

When I consider how my light is spent
Ere half my days, in this dark world and wide,
And that one talent which is death to hide
Lodged with me useless, though my soul more bent

To serve therewith my Maker, and present
My true account, lest He returning chide, —
Doth God exact day-labor, light denied?
I fondly ask: — But Patience, to prevent

That murmur, soon replies; God doth not need
Either man's work, or His own gifts: who best
Bear His mild yoke, they serve Him best: His state

Is kingly; thousands at His bidding speed
And post o'er land and ocean without rest: —
They also serve who only stand and wait.

J. Milton

95
CHARACTER OF A HAPPY LIFE

How happy is he born and taught
That serveth not another's will;
Whose armor is his honest thought
And simple truth his utmost skill!

Whose passions not his masters are,
Whose soul is still prepared for death,
Untied unto the world by care
Of public fame, or private breath;

Who envies none that chance doth raise
Nor vice; who never understood
How deepest wounds are given by praise;
Nor rules of state, but rules of good:

Who hath his life from rumors freed,
Whose conscience is his strong retreat;
Whose state can neither flatterers feed,
Nor ruin make oppressors great;

Who God doth late and early pray
More of His grace than gifts to lend:
And entertains the harmless day
With a religious book or friend;

— This man is freed from servile bands
Of hope to rise, or fear to fall;
Lord of himself, though not of lands;
And having nothing, yet hath all.

Sir H. Wotton

96
THE NOBLE NATURE

It is not growing like a tree
In bulk, doth make Man better be;
Or standing long an oak, three hundred year,
To fall a log at last, dry, bald, and sere:
A lily of a day
Is fairer far in May,
Although it fall and die that night —
It was the plant and flower of Light.
In small proportions we just beauties see;
And in short measures life may perfect be.

B. Jonson

97
THE GIFTS OF GOD

When God at first made Man,
Having a glass of blessings standing by:

Let us (said He) pour on him all we can:
Let the world's riches, which dispersèd lie,
Contract into a span.

So strength first made a way;
Then beauty flow'd, then wisdom, honor, pleasure:
When almost all was out, God made a stay,
Perceiving that alone, of all His treasure,
Rest in the bottom lay.

For if I should (said He)
Bestow this jewel also on My creature,
He would adore My gifts instead of Me,
And rest in Nature, not the God of Nature.
So both should losers be.

Yet let him keep the rest,
But keep them with repining restlessness:
Let him be rich and weary, that at least,
If goodness lead him not, yet weariness
May toss him to My breast.

G. Herbert

98

THE RETREAT

Happy those early days, when I
Shined in my Angel-infancy!
Before I understood this place
Appointed for my second race,
Or taught my soul to fancy aught
But a white, celestial thought;
When yet I had not walk'd above
A mile or two from my first Love,
And looking back, at that short space
Could see a glimpse of His bright face;
When on some gilded cloud or flower
My gazing soul would dwell an hour,
And in those weaker glories spy
Some shadows of eternity;

Before I taught my tongue to wound
My conscience with a sinful sound,
Or had the black art to dispense
A several sin to every sense,
But felt through all this fleshly dress
Bright shoots of everlastingness.

O how I long to travel back,
And tread again that ancient track!
That I might once more reach that plain
Where first I left my glorious train;
From whence th' enlighten'd spirit sees
That shady City of palm trees!
But ah! my soul with too much stay
Is drunk, and staggers in the way: —
Some men a forward motion love,
But I by backward steps would move;
And when this dust falls to the urn,
In that state I came, return.

H. Vaughan

99
TO MR. LAWRENCE

Lawrence, of virtuous father virtuous son,
Now that the fields are dank and ways are mire,
Where shall we sometimes meet, and by the fire
Help waste a sullen day, what may be won

From the hard season gaining? Time will run
On smoother, till Favonius re-inspire
The frozen earth, and clothe in fresh attire
The lily and rose, that neither sow'd nor spun.

What neat repast shall feast us, light and choice,
Of Attic taste, with wine, whence we may rise
To hear the lute well touch'd, or artful voice

Warble immortal notes and Tuscan air?

He who of those delights can judge, and spare
To interpose them oft, is not unwise.

J. Milton

100

TO CYRIACK SKINNER

Cyriack, whose grandsire, on the royal bench
Of British Themis, with no mean applause
Pronounced, and in his volumes taught, our laws,
Which others at their bar so often wrench;

To-day deep thoughts resolve with me to drench
In mirth, that after no repenting draws;
Let Euclid rest, and Archimedes pause,
And what the Swede intend, and what the French.

To measure life learn thou betimes, and know
Toward solid good what leads the nearest way;
For other things mild Heaven a time ordains,

And disapproves that care, though wise in show,
That with superfluous burden loads the day,
And, when God sends a cheerful hour, refrains.

J. Milton

101

A HYMN IN PRAISE OF NEPTUNE

Of Neptune's empire let us sing,
At whose command the waves obey;
To whom the rivers tribute pay,
Down the high mountains sliding;
To whom the scaly nation yields
Homage for the crystal fields
Wherein they dwell;
And every sea-god pays a gem
Yearly out of his watery cell,
To deck great Neptune's diadem.

The Tritons dancing in a ring,
Before his palace gates do make
The water with their echoes quake,
Like the great thunder sounding:
The sea-nymphs chant their accents shrill,
And the Sirens taught to kill
With their sweet voice,
Make every echoing rock reply,
Unto their gentle murmuring noise,
The praise of Neptune's empery.

T. Campion

102

HYMN TO DIANA

Queen and Huntress, chaste and fair,
Now the sun is laid to sleep,
Seated in thy silver chair
State in wonted manner keep:
Hesperus entreats thy light,
Goddess excellently bright.

Earth, let not thy envious shade
Dare itself to interpose;
Cynthia's shining orb was made
Heaven to clear when day did close:
Bless us then with wishéd sight,
Goddess excellently bright.

Lay thy bow of pearl apart
And thy crystal-shining quiver;
Give unto the flying hart
Space to breathe, how short soever:
Thou that mak'st a day of night,
Goddess excellently bright!

B. Jonson

103
WISHES FOR THE SUPPOSED MISTRESS

Whoe'er she be,
That not impossible She
That shall command my heart and me;

Where'er she lie,
Lock'd up from mortal eye
In shady leaves of destiny:

Till that ripe birth
Of studied Fate stand forth,
And teach her fair steps tread our earth;

Till that divine
Idea take a shrine
Of crystal flesh, through which to shine:

— Meet you her, my Wishes,
Bespeak her to my blisses,
And be ye call'd, my absent kisses.

I wish her beauty
That owes not all its duty
To gaudy tire, or glist'ring shoe-tie:

Something more than
Taffeta or tissue can,
Or rampant feather, or rich fan.

A face that's best
By its own beauty drest,
And can alone commend the rest:

A face made up
Out of no other shop
Than what Nature's white hand sets ope.

Sidneian showers
Of sweet discourse, whose powers
Can crown old Winter's head with flowers.

Whate'er delight
Can make day's forehead bright
Or give down to the wings of night.

Soft silken hours,
Open suns, shady bowers;
'Bove all, nothing within that lowers.

Days, that need borrow
No part of their good morrow
From a fore-spent night of sorrow:

Days, that in spite
Of darkness, by the light
Of a clear mind are day all night.

Life, that dares send
A challenge to his end,
And when it comes, say, "Welcome, friend."

I wish her store
Of worth may leave her poor
Of wishes; and I wish — no more.

Now, if Time knows
That Her, whose radiant brows
Weave them a garland of my vows;

Her that dares be
What these lines wish to see:
I seek no further, it is She.

'Tis She, and here
Lo! I unclothe and clear
My wishes' cloudy character.

Such worth as this is
Shall fix my flying wishes,
And determine them to kisses.

Let her full glory,
My fancies, fly before ye;
Be ye my fictions: — but her story.

R. Crashaw

104

THE GREAT ADVENTURER

Over the mountains
And over the waves,
Under the fountains
And under the graves;
Under floods that are deepest,
Which Neptune obey;
Over rocks that are steepest
Love will find out the way.

Where there is no place
For the glow-worm to lie;
Where there is no space
For receipt of a fly;
Where the midge dares not venture
Lest herself fast she lay;
If love come, he will enter
And soon find out his way.

You may esteem him
A child for his might;
Or you may deem him
A coward from his flight;
But if she whom love doth honor
Be conceal'd from the day,
Set a thousand guards upon her,
Love will find out the way.

Some think to lose him
By having him confined;

And some do suppose him,
Poor thing, to be blind;
But if ne'er so close ye wall him,
Do the best that you may,
Blind love, if so ye call him,
Will find out his way.

You may train the eagle
To stoop to your fist;
Or you may inveigle
The phœnix of the east;
The lioness, ye may move her
To give o'er her prey;
But you'll ne'er stop a lover:
He will find out his way.

Anon.

105

THE PICTURE OF LITTLE T. C. IN A PROSPECT OF FLOWERS

See with what simplicity
This nymph begins her golden days!
In the green grass she loves to lie,
And there with her fair aspect tames
The wilder flowers, and gives them names;
But only with the roses plays,
And them does tell
What colors best become them, and what smell.

Who can foretell for what high cause
This darling of the Gods was born?
Yet this is she whose chaster laws
The wanton Love shall one day fear,
And, under her command severe,
See his bow broke, and ensigns torn.
Happy who can
Appease this virtuous enemy of man!

O then let me in time compound
And parley with those conquering eyes,

Ere they have tried their force to wound;
Ere with their glancing wheels they drive
In triumph over hearts that strive,
And them that yield but more despise:
Let me be laid,
Where I may see the glories from some shade.

Meantime, whilst every verdant thing
Itself does at thy beauty charm,
Reform the errors of the Spring;
Make that the tulips may have share
Of sweetness, seeing they are fair,
And roses of their thorns disarm;
But most procure
That violets may a longer age endure.

But O young beauty of the woods,
Whom Nature courts with fruits and flowers,
Gather the flowers, but spare the buds;
Lest FLORA, angry at thy crime
To kill her infants in their prime,
Should quickly make th' example yours;
And ere we see —
Nip in the blossom — all our hopes and thee.

A. Marvell

106

CHILD AND MAIDEN

Ah, Chloris! could I now but sit
As unconcern'd as when
Your infant beauty could beget
No happiness or pain!
When I the dawn used to admire,
And praised the coming day,
I little thought the rising fire
Would take my rest away.

Your charms in harmless childhood lay
Like metals in a mine;

Age from no face takes more away
  That youth conceal'd in thine.
But as your charms insensibly
  To their perfection prest,
So love as unperceived did fly,
  And center'd in my breast.

My passion with your beauty grew,
  While Cupid at my heart,
Still as his mother favor'd you,
  Threw a new flaming dart:
Each gloried in their wanton part;
  To make a lover, he Employ'd the utmost of his art —
  To make a beauty, she.

Sir C. Sedley

107

CONSTANCY

I cannot change, as others do,
  Though you unjustly scorn,
Since that poor swain that sighs for you,
  For you alone was born;
No, Phyllis, no, your heart to move
  A surer way I'll try, —
And to revenge my slighted love,
  Will still love on, and die.

When, kill'd with grief, Amintas lies,
  And you to mind shall call
The sighs that now unpitied rise,
  The tears that vainly fall,
That welcome hour that ends his smart
  Will then begin your pain,
For such a faithful tender heart
  Can never break in vain.

J. Wilmot, Earl of Rochester

108

COUNSEL TO GIRLS

Gather ye rosebuds while ye may,
Old Time is still a-flying:
And this same flower that smiles to-day,
To-morrow will be dying.

The glorious Lamp of Heaven, the Sun,
The higher he's a-getting
The sooner will his race be run,
And nearer he's to setting.

That age is best which is the first,
When youth and blood are warmer;
But being spent, the worse, and worst
Times, still succeed the former.

Then be not coy, but use your time;
And while ye may, go marry:
For having lost but once your prime,
You may forever tarry.

R. Herrick

109

TO LUCASTA, ON GOING TO THE WARS

Tell me not, Sweet, I am unkind
That from the nunnery
Of thy chaste breast and quiet mind,
To war and arms I fly.

True, a new mistress now I chase,
The first foe in the field;
And with a stronger faith embrace
A sword, a horse, a shield.

Yet this inconstancy is such
As you too shall adore!

I could not love thee, Dear, so much,
Loved I not Honor more.

Colonel Lovelace

110

ELIZABETH OF BOHEMIA

You meaner beauties of the night,
That poorly satisfy our eyes
More by your number than your light,
You common people of the skies,
What are you, when the Moon shall rise?

You curious chanters of the wood
That warble forth dame Nature's lays,
Thinking your passions understood
By your weak accents; what's your praise
When Philomel her voice doth raise?

You violets that first appear,
By your pure purple mantles known
Like the proud virgins of the year,
As if the spring were all your own, —
What are you, when the Rose is blown?

So when my Mistress shall be seen
In form and beauty of her mind,
By virtue first, then choice, a Queen,
Tell me, if she were not design'd
Th' eclipse and glory of her kind?

Sir H. Wotton

111

TO THE LADY MARGARET LEY

Daughter to that good Earl, once President
Of England's Council and her Treasury,
Who lived in both, unstain'd with gold or fee,
And left them both, more in himself content,

Till the sad breaking of that Parliament
Broke him, as that dishonest victory
At Chæronea, fatal to liberty,
Kill'd with report that old man eloquent; —

Though later born than to have known the days
Wherein your father flourish'd, yet by you,
Madam, methinks I see him living yet;
So well your words his noble virtues praise,
That all both judge you to relate them true,
And to possess them, honor'd Margaret.

J. Milton

112

THE TRUE BEAUTY

He that loves a rosy cheek
Or a coral lip admires,
Or from starlike eyes doth seek
Fuel to maintain his fires;
As old Time makes these decay,
So his flames must waste away.

But a smooth and steadfast mind,
Gentle thoughts, and calm desires,
Hearts with equal love combined,
Kindle never-dying fires: —
Where these are not, I despise
Lovely cheeks or lips or eyes.

T. Carew

113

TO DIANEME

Sweet, be not proud of those two eyes
Which starlike sparkle in their skies;
Nor be you proud, that you can see
All hearts your captives; yours yet free:
Be you not proud of that rich hair
Which wantons with the lovesick air;

Whenas that ruby which you wear,
Sunk from the tip of your soft ear,
Will last to be a precious stone
When all your world of beauty's gone.

R. Herrick

114

Love in thy youth, fair Maid, be wise;
Old Time will make thee colder,
And though each morning new arise,
Yet we each day grow older.
Thou as Heaven art fair and young,
Thine eyes like twin stars shining;
But ere another day be sprung
All these will be declining.
Then winter comes with all his fears,
And all thy sweets shall borrow;
Too late then wilt thou shower thy tears, —
And I too late shall sorrow!

Anon.

115

Go, lovely Rose!
Tell her, that wastes her time and me,
That now she knows,
When I resemble her to thee,
How sweet and fair she seems to be.

Tell her that's young
And shuns to have her graces spied,
That hadst thou sprung
In deserts, where no men abide,
Thou must have uncommended died.

Small is the worth
Of beauty from the light retired:
Bid her come forth,
Suffer herself to be desired,
And not blush so to be admired.

Then die! that she
The common fate of all things rare
May read in thee:
How small a part of time they share
That are so wondrous sweet and fair!

E. Waller

116

TO CELIA

Drink to me only with thine eyes,
And I will pledge with mine;
Or leave a kiss but in the cup
And I'll not look for wine.
The thirst that from the soul doth rise
Doth ask a drink divine;
But might I of Jove's nectar sup,
I would not change for thine.

I sent thee late a rosy wreath,
Not so much honoring thee
As giving it a hope that there
It could not wither'd be;
But thou thereon didst only breathe
And sent'st it back to me;
Since when it grows, and smells, I swear,
Not of itself but thee!

B. Jonson

117

CHERRY-RIPE

There is a garden in her face
Where roses and white lilies blow;
A heavenly paradise is that place,
Wherein all pleasant fruits do grow;
There cherries grow that none may buy,
Till Cherry-Ripe themselves do cry.

Those cherries fairly do inclose
Of orient pearl a double row,

Which when her lovely laughter shows,
They look like rose-buds fill'd with snow:
Yet them no peer nor prince may buy,
Till Cherry-Ripe themselves do cry.

Her eyes like angels watch them still;
Her brows like bended bows do stand,
Threat'ning with piercing frowns to kill
All that approach with eye or hand
These sacred cherries to come nigh,
Till Cherry-Ripe themselves do cry!

Anon.

118

CORINNA'S MAYING

Get up, get up for shame! The blooming morn
Upon her wings presents the god unshorn.
See how Aurora throws her fair
Fresh-quilted colors through the air:
Get up, sweet Slug-a-bed, and see
The dew bespangling herb and tree.
Each flower has wept, and bow'd toward the east,
Above an hour since; yet you not drest,
Nay! not so much as out of bed?
When all the birds have matins said,
And sung their thankful hymns: 'tis sin,
Nay, profanation, to keep in, —
Whenas a thousand virgins on this day
Spring, sooner than the lark, to fetch in May.

Rise; and put on your foliage, and be seen
To come forth, like the Spring-time, fresh and green
And sweet as Flora. Take no care
For jewels for your gown, or hair:
Fear not; the leaves will strew
Gems in abundance upon you:
Besides, the childhood of the day has kept,
Against you come, some orient pearls unwept:

Come, and receive them while the light
Hangs on the dew-locks of the night:
And Titan on the eastern hill
Retires himself, or else stands still
Till you come forth. Wash, dress, be brief in praying:
Few beads are best, when once we go a Maying.

Come, my Corinna, come; and coming, mark
How each field turns a street; each street a park
Made green, and trimm'd with trees: see how Devotion gives each house a bough
Or branch: Each porch, each door, ere this,
An ark, a tabernacle is,
Made up of white-thorn neatly interwove;
As if here were those cooler shades of love.
Can such delights be in the street,
And open fields, and we not see't?
Come we'll abroad: and let's obey
The proclamation made for May:
And sin no more, as we have done, by staying;
But, my Corinna, come, let's go a Maying.

There's not a budding boy, or girl, this day,
But is got up, and gone to bring in May.
A deal of youth, ere this, is come
Back, and with white-thorn laden home.
Some have dispatch'd their cakes and cream,
Before that we have left to dream:
And some have wept, and woo'd, and plighted troth,
And chose their priest, ere we can cast off sloth:
Many a green-gown has been given;
Many a kiss, both odd and even:
Many a glance too has been sent
From out the eye, Love's firmament:
Many a jest told of the keys betraying
This night, and locks pick'd: — Yet we're not a Maying.

— Come, let us go, while we are in our prime:
And take the harmless folly of the time!

We shall grow old apace, and die
Before we know our liberty.
Our life is short; and our days run
As fast away as does the sun: —
And as a vapor, or a drop of rain
Once lost, can ne'er be found again:
So when or you or I are made
A fable, song, or fleeting shade;
All love, all liking, all delight
Lies drown'd with us in endless night.
Then while time serves, and we are but decaying,
Come, my Corinna! come, let's go a Maying.

R. Herrick

119

THE POETRY OF DRESS

I

A sweet disorder in the dress
Kindles in clothes a wantonness: —
A lawn about the shoulders thrown Into a fine distractión, —
An erring lace, which here and there
Enthralls the crimson stomacher, —
A cuff neglectful, and thereby
Ribbands to flow confusedly, —
A winning wave, deserving note,
In the tempestuous petticoat, —
A careless shoe string, in whose tie
I see a wild civility, —
Do more bewitch me, than when art
Is too precise in every part.

R. Herrick

120

II

Whenas in silks my Julia goes
Then, then (methinks) how sweetly flows
That liquefaction of her clothes.

Next, when I cast mine eyes and see
That brave vibration each way free;
O how that glittering taketh me!

R. Herrick

121

111

My Love in her attire doth show her wit,
It doth so well become her:
For every season she hath dressings fit,
For Winter, Spring, and Summer.
No beauty she doth miss
When all her robes are on:
But Beauty's self she is
When all her robes are gone.

Anon.

122

ON A GIRDLE

That which her slender waist confined
Shall now my joyful temples bind:
No monarch but would give his crown
His arms might do what this has done.

It was my Heaven's extremest sphere,
The pale which held that lovely deer:
My joy, my grief, my hope, my love
Did all within this circle move.

A narrow compass! and yet there
Dwelt all that's good, and all that's fair:
Give me but what this ribband bound,
Take all the rest the Sun goes round.

E. Waller

123

A MYSTICAL ECSTASY

E'en like two little bank-dividing brooks,
That wash the pebbles with their wanton streams,
And having ranged and search'd a thousand nooks,
Meet both at length in silver-breasted Thames,
Where in a greater current they conjoin:
So I my Best-Belovéd's am; so He is mine.

E'en so we met; and after long pursuit,
E'en so we join'd; we both became entire;
No need for either to renew a suit,
For I was flax and he was flames of fire:
Our firm-united souls did more than twine;
So I my Best-Belovéd's am; so He is mine.

If all those glittering Monarchs that command
The servile quarters of this earthly ball,
Should tender, in exchange, their shares of land,
I would not change my fortunes for them all:
Their wealth is but a counter to my coin:
The world's but theirs; but my Belovéd's mine.

F. Quarles

124

TO ANTHEA WHO MAY COMMAND HIM ANYTHING

Bid me to live, and I will live
Thy Protestant to be:
Or bid me love, and I will give
A loving heart to thee.

A heart as soft, a heart as kind,
A heart as sound and free
As in the whole world thou canst find,
That heart I'll give to thee.

Bid that heart stay, and it will stay,
To honor thy decree:
Or bid it languish quite away,
And't shall do so for thee.

Bid me to weep, and I will weep
While I have eyes to see:
And having none, yet I will keep
A heart to weep for thee.

Bid me despair, and I'll despair,
Under that cypress tree:
Or bid me die, and I will dare
E'en Death, to die for thee.

Thou art my life, my love, my heart,
The very eyes of me,
And hast command of every part,
To live and die for thee.

R. Herrick

125

Love not me for comely grace,
For my pleasing eye or face,
Nor for any outward part,
No, nor for my constant heart, —
For those may fail, or turn to ill,
So thou and I shall sever.
Keep therefore a true woman's eye
And love me still, but know not why —
So hast thou the same reason still
To dote upon me ever!

Anon.

126

Not, Celia, that I juster am
Or better than the rest;
For I would change each hour, like them,
Were not my heart at rest.

But I am tied to very thee
By every thought I have;
Thy face I only care to see,
Thy heart I only crave.

All that in woman is adored
In thy dear self I find —
For the whole sex can but afford
The handsome and the kind.

Why then should I seek further store,
And still make love anew?
When change itself can give no more,
'Tis easy to be true.

Sir C. Sedley

127

TO ALTHEA FROM PRISON

When Love with unconfinéd wings
Hovers within my gates,
And my divine Althea brings
To whisper at the grates;
When I lie tangled in her hair
And fetter'd to her eye,
The Gods that wanton in the air
Know no such liberty.

When flowing cups run swiftly round
With no allaying Thames,
Our careless heads with roses bound,
Our hearts with loyal flames;
When thirsty grief in wine we steep,
When healths and draughts go free —
Fishes that tipple in the deep
Know no such liberty.

When (like committed linnets) I
With shriller throat shall sing
The sweetness, mercy, majesty

And glories of my King;
When I shall voice aloud how good
He is, how great should be,
Enlargéd winds, that curl the flood,
Know no such liberty.

Stone walls do not a prison make,
Nor iron bars a cage;
Minds innocent and quiet take
That for an hermitage;
If I have freedom in my love
And in my soul am free,
Angels alone, that soar above,
Enjoy such liberty.

Colonel Lovelace

128

TO LUCASTA, GOING BEYOND THE SEAS

If to be absent were to be
Away from thee;
Or that when I am gone
You or I were alone;
Then, my Lucasta, might I crave
Pity from blustering wind, or swallowing wave.

But I'll not sigh one blast or gale
To swell my sail,
Or pay a tear to 'suage
The foaming blue-god's rage;
For whether he will let me pass
Or no, I'm still as happy as I was.

Though seas and land betwixt us both,
Our faith and troth,
Like separated souls,
All time and space controls:
Above the highest sphere we meet
Unseen, unknown, and greet as Angels greet.

So then we do anticipate
Our after-fate,
And are alive i' the skies,
If thus our lips and eyes
Can speak like spirits unconfined
In Heaven, their earthy bodies left behind.

Colonel Lovelace

129

ENCOURAGEMENTS TO A LOVER

Why so pale and wan, fond lover?
Prithee, why so pale?
Will, if looking well can't move her,
Looking ill prevail?
Prithee, why so pale?

Why so dull and mute, young sinner?
Prithee, why so mute?
Will, when speaking well can't win her,
Saying nothing do't?
Prithee, why so mute?

Quit, quit, for shame! this will not move,
This cannot take her;
If of herself she will not love,
Nothing can make her:
The D—l take her!

Sir J. Suckling

130

A SUPPLICATION

Awake, awake, my Lyre!
And tell thy silent master's humble tale
In sounds that may prevail;
Sounds that gentle thoughts inspire:
Though so exalted she
And I so lowly be
Tell her, such different notes make all thy harmony.

Hark, how the strings awake!
And, though the moving hand approach not near,
Themselves with awful fear
A kind of numerous trembling make.
Now all thy forces try;
Now all thy charms apply;
Revenge upon her ear the conquests of her eye.

Weak Lyre! thy virtue sure
Is useless here, since thou art only found
To cure, but not to wound,
And she to wound, but not to cure.
Too weak too wilt thou prove
My passion to remove;
Physic to other ills, thou'rt nourishment to Love.

Sleep, sleep again, my Lyre!
For thou canst never tell my humble tale
In sounds that will prevail,
Nor gentle thoughts in her inspire;
All thy vain mirth lay by,
Bid thy strings silent lie,
Sleep, sleep again, my Lyre, and let thy master die.

A. Cowley

131

THE MANLY HEART

Shall I, wasting in despair,
Die because a woman's fair?
Or make pale my cheeks with care
'Cause another's rosy are?
Be she fairer than the day
Or the flowery meads in May —
If she think not well of me
What care I how fair she be?

Shall my silly heart be pined
'Cause I see a woman kind;
Or a well disposéd nature
Joinéd with a lovely feature?

Be she meeker, kinder than
Turtle-dove or pelican,
If she be not so to me
What care I how kind she be?

Shall a woman's virtues move
Me to perish for her love?
Or her well-deservings known
Make me quite forget mine own?
Be she with that goodness blest
Which may merit name of Best;
If she be not such to me,
What care I how good she be?

'Cause her fortune seems too high,
Shall I play the fool and die?
She that bears a noble mind
If not outward helps she find,
Thinks what with them he would do
Who without them dares her woo;
And unless that mind I see,
What care I how great she be?

Great or good, or kind or fair,
I will ne'er the more despair;
If she love me, this believe,
I will die ere she shall grieve;
If she slight me when I woo,
I can scorn and let her go;
For if she be not for me,
What care I for whom she be?

G. Wither

132

MELANCHOLY

Hence, all you vain delights,
As short as are the nights
Wherein you spend your folly:
There's naught in this life sweet

If man were wise to see't,
But only melancholy,
O sweetest Melancholy!
Welcome, folded arms, and fixéd eyes,
A sigh that piercing mortifies,
A look that's fasten'd to the ground,
A tongue chain'd up without a sound!
Fountain-heads and pathless groves,
Places which pale passion loves!
Moonlight walks, when all the fowls
Are warmly housed save bats and owls!
A midnight bell, a parting groan!
These are the sounds we feed upon;
Then stretch our bones in a still gloomy valley;
Nothing's so dainty sweet as lovely melancholy.

J. Fletcher

133
FORSAKEN

O waly waly up the bank,
And waly waly down the brae,
And waly waly yon burn-side
Where I and my Love wont to gae!
I leant my back unto an aik,
I thought it was a trusty tree;
But first it bow'd, and syne it brak,
Sae my true Love did lichtly me.

O waly waly, but love be bonny
A little time while it is new;
But when 'tis auld, it waxeth cauld
And fades awa' like morning dew.
Or wherefore should I busk my head?
Or wherefore should I kame my hair?
For my true Love has me forsook,
And says he'll never loe me mair.

Now Arthur-seat sall be my bed;
The sheets shall ne'er be prest by me:

Saint Anton's well sall be my drink,
Since my true Love has forsaken me.
Marti'mas wind, when wilt thou blaw
And shake the green leaves aff the tree?
O gentle Death, when wilt thou come?
For of my life I am wearíe.

'Tis not the frost that freezes fell,
Nor blawing snaw's inclemencie;
'Tis not sic cauld that makes me cry,
But my Love's heart grown cauld to me.
When we came in by Glasgow town
We were a comely sight to see;
My Love was clad in the black velvét,
And I myself in cramasie.

But had I wist, before I kist,
That love had been sae ill to win;
I had lockt my heart in a case of gowd
And pinn'd it with a siller pin.
And, O! if my young babe were born,
And set upon the nurse's knee,
And I mysell were dead and gane,
And the green grass growing over me!

Anon.

134

Upon my lap my sovereign sits
And sucks upon my breast;
Meantime his love maintains my life
And gives my sense her rest.
Sing lullaby, my little boy,
Sing lullaby, mine only joy!

When thou hast taken thy repast,
Repose, my babe, on me;
So may thy mother and thy nurse
Thy cradle also be.
Sing lullaby, my little boy,
Sing lullaby, mine only joy!

I grieve that duty doth not work
All that my wishing would,
Because I would not be to thee
But in the best I should.
Sing lullaby, my little boy,
Sing lullaby, mine only joy!

Yet as I am, and as I may,
I must and will be thine,
Though all too little for thyself
Vouchsafing to be mine.
Sing lullaby, my little boy,
Sing lullaby, mine only joy!

Anon.

135
FAIR HELEN

I wish I were where Helen lies;
Night and day on me she cries;
O that I were where Helen lies
On fair Kirconnell lea!

Curst be the heart that thought the thought,
And curst the hand that fired the shot,
When in my arms burd Helen dropt,
And died to succor me!

O think na but my heart was sair
When my Love dropt down and spak nae mair!
I laid her down wi' meikle care
On fair Kirconnell lea.

As I went down the water-side,
None but my foe to be my guide,
None but my foe to be my guide,
On fair Kirconnell lea;

I lighted down my sword to draw,
I hackéd him in pieces sma',

I hackéd him in pieces sma',
For her sake that died for me.

O Helen fair, beyond compare!
I'll make a garland of thy hair
Shall bind my heart for evermair
Until the day I die.

O that I were where Helen lies!
Night and day on me she cries;
Out of my bed she bids me rise,
Says, "Haste and come to me!"

O Helen fair! O Helen chaste!
If I were with thee, I were blest,
Where thou lies low and takes thy rest
On fair Kirconnell lea.

I wish my grave were growing green,
A winding-sheet drawn ower my een,
And I in Helen's arms lying,
On fair Kirconnell lea.

I wish I were where Helen lies;
Night and day on me she cries;
And I am weary of the skies,
Since my Love died for me.

Anon.

136

THE TWA CORBIES

As I was walking all alane
I heard twa corbies making a mane;
The tane unto the t'other say,
"Where sall we gang and dine to-day?"

"— In behint yon auld fail dyke,
I wot there lies a new-slain Knight;
And nabody kens that he lies there,
But his hawk, his hound, and lady fair.

"His hound is to the hunting gane,
His hawk to fetch the wild-fowl hame,
His lady's ta'en another mate,
So we may mak our dinner sweet.

"Ye'll sit on his white hause-bane,
And I'll pick out his bonnie blue een:
Wi' ae lock o' his gowden hair
We'll theek our nest when it grows bare.

"Mony a one for him makes mane,
But nane sall ken where he is gane;
O'er his white banes, when they are bare,
The wind sall blaw for evermair."

Anon.

137

ON THE DEATH OF MR. WILLIAM HERVEY

It was a dismal and a fearful night, —
Scarce could the Morn drive on th' unwilling light,
When sleep, death's image, left my troubled breast,
By something liker death possest.
My eyes with tears did uncommanded flow,
And on my soul hung the dull weight
Of some intolerable fate.
What bell was that? Ah me! Too much I know!

My sweet companion, and my gentle peer,
Why hast thou left me thus unkindly here,
Thy end forever, and my life, to moan?
O thou hast left me all alone!
Thy soul and body, when death's agony
Besieged around thy noble heart,
Did not with more reluctance part
Than I, my dearest friend, do part from thee.

Ye fields of Cambridge, our dear Cambridge, say,
Have ye not seen us, walking every day?
Was there a tree about which did not know
The love betwixt us two?

Henceforth, ye gentle trees, forever fade,
Or your sad branches thicker join,
And into darksome shades combine,
Dark as the grave wherein my friend is laid.

Large was his soul; as large a soul as e'er
Submitted to inform a body here;
High as the place 'twas shortly in Heaven to have,
But low and humble as his grave;
So high that all the virtues there did come
As to the chiefest seat
Conspicuous, and great;
So low that for me too it made a room.

Knowledge he only sought, and so soon caught,
As if for him knowledge had rather sought;
Nor did more learning ever crowded lie
In such a short mortality.
Whene'er the skillful youth discoursed or writ,
Still did the notions throng
About his eloquent tongue;
Nor could his ink flow faster than his wit.

His mirth was the pure spirits of various wit,
Yet never did his God or friends forget.
And when deep talk and wisdom came in view,
Retired, and gave to them their due.
For the rich help of books he always took,
Though his own searching mind before
Was so with notions written o'er,
As if wise Nature had made that her book.

With as much zeal, devotion, piety,
He always lived, as other saints do die.
Still with his soul severe account he kept,
Weeping all debts out ere he slept.
Then down in peace and innocence he lay,
Like the sun's laborious light,
Which still in water sets at night,
Unsullied with his journey of the day.

A. Cowley

138
FRIENDS IN PARADISE

They are all gone into the world of light!
And I alone sit lingering here;
Their very memory is fair and bright,
And my sad thoughts doth clear: —

It glows and glitters in my cloudy breast,
Like stars upon some gloomy grove,
Or those faint beams in which this hill is drest,
After the sun's remove.

I see them walking in an air of glory,
Whose light doth trample on my days:
My days, which are at best but dull and hoary,
Mere glimmering and decays.

O holy Hope! and high Humility,
High as the Heavens above!
These are your walks, and you have show'd them me,
To kindle my cold love.

Dear, beauteous Death! the jewel of the just,
Shining nowhere, but in the dark;
What mysteries do lie beyond thy dust,
Could man outlook that mark!

He that hath found some fledged bird's nest, may know
At first sight, if the bird be flown;
But what fair well or grove he sings in now,
That is to him unknown.

And yet, as Angels in some brighter dreams
Call to the soul, when man doth sleep;
So some strange thoughts transcend our wonted themes,
And into glory peep.

H. Vaughan

139

TO BLOSSOMS

Fair pledges of a fruitful tree,
Why do ye fall so fast?
Your date is not so past,
But you may stay yet here awhile
To blush and gently smile,
And go at last.

What, were ye born to be
An hour or half's delight,
And so to bid good-night?
'Twas pity Nature brought ye forth
Merely to show your worth,
And lose you quite.

But you are lovely leaves, where we
May read how soon things have
Their end, though ne'er so brave:
And after they have shown their pride
Like you, awhile, they glide
Into the grave.

R. Herrick

140

TO DAFFODILS

Fair Daffodils, we weep to see
You haste away so soon:
As yet the early-rising Sun
Has not attain'd his noon.
Stay, stay,
Until the hasting day
Has run
But to the even-song;
And, having pray'd together, we
Will go with you along.

We have short time to stay, as you,
We have as short a spring;

As quick a growth to meet decay
As you, or anything.
We die,
As your hours do, and dry
Away
Like to the summer's rain;
Or as the pearls of morning's dew
Ne'er to be found again.

R. Herrick

141
THE GIRL DESCRIBES HER FAWN

With sweetest milk and sugar first
I it at my own fingers nursed;
And as it grew, so every day
It wax'd more white and sweet than they —
It had so sweet a breath! and oft
I blush'd to see its foot more soft
And white, — shall I say, — than my hand?
Nay, any lady's of the land!

It is a wondrous thing how fleet
'Twas on those little silver feet:
With what a pretty skipping grace
It oft would challenge me the race: —
And when 't had left me far away
'Twould stay, and run again, and stay:
For it was nimbler much than hinds,
And trod as if on the four winds.

I have a garden of my own,
But so with roses overgrown
And lilies, that you would it guess
To be a little wilderness:
And all the springtime of the year
It only lovéd to be there.
Among the beds of lilies I
Have sought it oft, where it should lie;

Yet could not, till itself would rise,
Find it, although before mine eyes: —
For in the flaxen lilies' shade
It like a bank of lilies laid.

Upon the roses it would feed,
Until its lips e'en seem'd to bleed:
And then to me 'twould boldly trip,
And print those roses on my lip.
But all its chief delight was still
On roses thus itself to fill,
And its pure virgin limbs to fold
In whitest sheets of lilies cold: —
Had it lived long, it would have been Lilies without — roses within.

A. Marvell

142

THOUGHTS IN A GARDEN

How vainly men themselves amaze
To win the palm, the oak, or bays,
And their uncessant labors see
Crown'd from some single herb or tree,
Whose short and narrow-vergéd shade
Does prudently their toils upbraid;
While all the flowers and trees do close
To weave the garlands of Repose.

Fair Quiet, have I found thee here,
And Innocence thy sister dear!
Mistaken long, I sought you then
In busy companies of men:
Your sacred plants, if here below,
Only among the plants will grow:
Society is all but rude
To this delicious solitude.

No white nor red was ever seen
So amorous as this lovely green.

Fond lovers, cruel as their flame,
Cut in these trees their mistress' name:
Little, alas, they know or heed
How far these beauties hers exceed!
Fair trees! wheres'e'er your barks I wound,
No name shall but your own be found.

When we have run our passions' heat
Love hither makes his best retreat:
The gods, who mortal beauty chase,
Still in a tree did end their race;
Apollo hunted Daphne so
Only that she might laurel grow;
And Pan did after Syrinx speed
Not as a nymph, but for a reed.

What wondrous life is this I lead!
Ripe apples drop about my head;
The luscious clusters of the vine
Upon my mouth do crush their wine;
The nectarine and curious peach
Into my hands themselves do reach;
Stumbling on melons, as I pass,
Ensnared with flowers, I fall on grass.

Meanwhile the mind from pleasure less
Withdraws into its happiness;
The mind, that ocean where each kind
Does straight its own resemblance find;
Yet it creates, transcending these,
Far other worlds, and other seas;
Annihilating all that's made
To a green thought in a green shade.

Here at the fountain's sliding foot
Or at some fruit tree's mossy root,
Casting the body's vest aside
My soul into the boughs does glide;
There, like a bird, it sits and sings,
Then whets and claps its silver wings,

And, till prepared for longer flight,
Waves in its plumes the various light.

Such was that happy Garden-state
While man there walk'd without a mate:
After a place so pure and sweet,
What other help could yet be meet!
But 'twas beyond a mortal's share
To wander solitary there:
Two paradises 'twere in one,
To live in Paradise alone.

How well the skillful gardener drew
Of flowers and herbs this dial new!
Where, from above, the milder sun
Does through a fragrant zodiac run:
And, as it works, th' industrious bee
Computes its time as well as we.
How could such sweet and wholesome hours
Be reckon'd, but with herbs and flowers!

A. Marvell

143
FORTUNATI NIMIUM

Jack and Joan, they think no ill,
But loving live, and merry still;
Do their week-day's work, and pray
Devoutly on the holyday:
Skip and trip it on the green,
And help to choose the Summer Queen;
Lash out at a country feast
Their silver penny with the best.

Well can they judge of nappy ale,
And tell at large a winter tale;
Climb up to the apple loft,
And turn the crabs till they be soft.
Tib is all the father's joy,
And little Tom the mother's boy: —

All their pleasure is, Content,
And care, to pay their yearly rent.

Joan can call by name her cows
And deck her windows with green boughs;
She can wreaths and tutties make,
And trim with plums a bridal cake.
Jack knows what brings gain or loss,
And his long flail can stoutly toss:
Makes the hedge which others break,
And ever thinks what he doth speak.

— Now, you courtly dames and knights,
That study only strange delights,
Though you scorn the homespun gray,
And revel in your rich array;
Though your tongues dissemble deep
And can your heads from danger keep;
Yet, for all your pomp and train,
Securer lives the silly swain!

T. Campion

144
L'ALLEGRO

Hence, loathéd Melancholy,
Of Cerberus and blackest Midnight born
In Stygian cave forlorn
'Mongst horrid shapes, and shrieks, and sights unholy!
Find out some uncouth cell
Where brooding Darkness spreads his jealous wings
And the night-raven sings;
There under ebon shades, and low-brow'd rocks
As ragged as thy locks,
In dark Cimmerian desert ever dwell.

But come, thou Goddess fair and free,
In heaven yclept Euphrosyne,
And by men, heart-easing Mirth,
Whom lovely Venus at a birth

With two sister Graces more
To ivy-crownéd Bacchus bore;
Or whether (as some sager sing)
The frolic wind that breathes the spring
Zephyr, with Aurora playing,
As he met her once a Maying —
There on beds of violets blue
And fresh-blown roses wash'd in dew
Fill'd her with thee, a daughter fair,
So buxom, blithe, and debonair.
Haste thee, Nymph, and bring with thee
Jest, and youthful jollity,
Quips, and cranks, and wanton wiles,
Nods, and becks, and wreathéd smiles
Such as hang on Hebe's cheek,
And love to live in dimple sleek;
Sport that wrinkled Care derides,
And Laughter holding both his sides: —
Come, and trip it as you go
On the light fantastic toe;
And in thy right hand lead with thee
The mountain-nymph, sweet Liberty;
And if I give thee honor due
Mirth, admit me of thy crew,
To live with her, and live with thee
In unreprovéd pleasures free;
To hear the lark begin his flight
And singing startle the dull night
From his watchtower in the skies,
Till the dappled dawn doth rise;
Then to come, in spite of sorrow,
And at my window bid good-morrow
Through the sweetbrier, or the vine,
Or the twisted eglantine:
While the cock with lively din
Scatters the rear of darkness thin,
And to the stack, or the barn door,
Stoutly struts his dames before:
Oft listening how the hounds and horn
Cheerly rouse the slumbering morn,

From the side of some hoar hill,
Through the high wood echoing shrill:
Sometime walking, not unseen,
By hedgerow elms, on hillocks green,
Right against the eastern gate
Where the great Sun begins his state
Robed in flames and amber light,
The clouds in thousand liveries dight;
While the plowman, near at hand,
Whistles o'er the furrow'd land,
And the milkmaid singeth blithe,
And the mower whets his scythe,
And every shepherd tells his tale
Under the hawthorn in the dale.
  Straight mine eye hath caught new pleasures
Whilst the landscape round it measures;
Russet lawns, and fallows gray,
Where the nibbling flocks do stray;
Mountains, on whose barren breast
The laboring clouds do often rest;
Meadows trim with daisies pied,
Shallow brooks, and rivers wide;
Towers and battlements it sees
Bosom'd high in tufted trees,
Where perhaps some Beauty lies,
The Cynosure of neighboring eyes.
  Hard by, a cottage chimney smokes
From betwix two aged oaks,
Where Corydon and Thyrsis, met,
Are at their savory dinner set
Of herbs, and other country messes
Which the neat-handed Phillis dresses;
And then in haste her bower she leaves
With Thestylis to bind the sheaves;
Or, if the earlier season lead,
To the tann'd haycock in the mead.
  Sometimes with secure delight
The upland hamlets will invite,
When the merry bells ring round,
And the jocund rebecks sound

To many a youth and many a maid,
Dancing in the checker'd shade;
And young and old come forth to play
On a sunshine holiday,
Till the livelong daylight fail:
Then to the spicy nut-brown ale,
With stories told of many a feat,
How Faery Mab the junkets eat: —
She was pinch'd, and pull'd, she said;
And he, by Friar's lantern led;
Tells how the drudging Goblin sweat
To earn his cream bowl duly set,
When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy flail hath thresh'd the corn
That ten day laborers could not end;
Then lies him down the lubber fiend,
And, stretch'd out all the chimney's length,
Basks at the fire his hairy strength;
And crop-full out of doors he flings,
Ere the first cock his matin rings.
  Thus done the tales, to bed they creep,
By whispering winds soon lull'd asleep.
  Tower'd cities please us then
And the busy hum of men,
Where throngs of knights and barons bold,
In weeds of peace, high triumphs hold,
With store of ladies, whose bright eyes
Rain influence, and judge the prize
Of wit or arms, while both contend
To win her grace, whom all commend.
There let Hymen oft appear
In saffron robe, with taper clear,
And pomp, and feast, and revelry,
With mask, and antique pageantry;
Such sights as youthful poets dream
On summer eves by haunted stream.
Then to the well-trod stage anon,
If Jonson's learnéd sock be on,
Or sweetest Shakespeare, Fancy's child,
Warble his native wood-notes wild.

And ever against eating cares
Lap me in soft Lydian airs
Married to immortal verse,
Such as the meeting soul may pierce
In notes, with many a winding bout
Of linkéd sweetness long drawn out,
With wanton heed and giddy cunning,
The melting voice through mazes running,
Untwisting all the chains that tie
The hidden soul of harmony;
That Orpheus' self may heave his head
From golden slumber, on a bed
Of heap'd Elysian flowers, and hear
Such strains as would have won the ear
Of Pluto, to have quite set free
His half-regain'd Eurydice.
These delights if thou canst give,
Mirth, with thee I mean to live.

J. Milton

145
IL PENSEROSO

Hence, vain deluding Joys,
The brood of Folly without father bred! —
How little you bestead
Or fill the fixéd mind with all your toys!
Dwell in some idle brain,
And fancies fond with gaudy shapes possess
As thick and numberless
As the gay motes that people the sunbeams,
Or likest hovering dreams,
The fickle pensioners of Morpheus' train. —

But hail, thou goddess sage and holy,
Hail, divinest Melancholy!
Whose saintly visage is too bright
To hit the sense of human sight,
And therefore to our weaker view
O'erlaid with black, staid Wisdom's hue;

Black, but such as in esteem
Prince Memnon's sister might beseem,
Or that starr'd Ethiop queen that strove
To set her beauty's praise above
The sea nymphs, and their powers offended:
Yet thou art higher far descended:
Thee bright-hair'd Vesta, long of yore,
To solitary Saturn bore;
His daughter she; in Saturn's reign
Such mixture was not held a stain:
Oft in glimmering bowers and glades
He met her, and in secret shades
Of woody Ida's inmost grove,
While yet there saw no fear of Jove.
Come, pensive Nun, devout and pure,
Sober, steadfast, and demure,
All in a robe of darkest grain
Flowing with majestic train,
And sable stole of cypress lawn
Over thy decent shoulders drawn:
Come, but keep thy wonted state,
With even step, and musing gait,
And looks commercing with the skies,
Thy rapt soul sitting in thine eyes:
There, held in holy passion still,
Forget thyself to marble, till
With a sad leaden downward cast
Thou fix them on the earth as fast:
And join with thee calm Peace, and Quiet,
Spare Fast, that oft with gods doth diet,
And hears the Muses in a ring
Aye round about Jove's altar sing:
And add to these retired Leisure
That in trim gardens takes his pleasure: —
But first and chiefest, with thee bring Him that yon soars on golden wing
Guiding the fiery-wheeléd throne,
The cherub Contemplatión;
And the mute Silence hist along,
'Less Philomel will deign a song

In her sweetest saddest plight
Smoothing the rugged brow of Night, --
While Cynthia checks her dragon yoke
Gently o'er the accustom'd oak.
— Sweet bird, that shunn'st the noise of folly,
Most musical, most melancholy!
Thee, chantress, oft, the woods among
I woo, to hear thy evensong;
And missing thee, I walk unseen
On the dry smooth-shaven green,
To behold the wandering Moon
Riding near her highest noon,
Like one that had been led astray
Through the heaven's wide pathless way,
And oft, as if her head she bow'd,
Stooping through a fleecy cloud.
Oft, on a plat of rising ground
I hear the far-off Curfew sound
Over some wide-water'd shore,
Swinging slow with sullen roar:
Or, if the air will not permit,
Some still removéd place will fit,
Where glowing embers through the room
Teach light to counterfeit a gloom;
Far from all resort of mirth,
Save the cricket on the hearth,
Or the bellman's drowsy charm
To bless the doors from nightly harm.
Or let my lamp at midnight hour
Be seen in some high lonely tower,
Where I may oft out-watch the Bear
With thrice-great Hermes, or unsphere
The spirit of Plato, to unfold
What worlds or what vast regions hold
The immortal mind, that hath forsook
Her mansion in this fleshly nook:
And of those demons that are found
In fire, air, flood, or underground,
Whose power hath a true consent
With planet, or with element.

Sometime let gorgeous Tragedy
In scepter'd pall come sweeping by,
Presenting Thebes, or Pelops' line,
Or the tale of Troy divine;
Or what (though rare) of later age
Ennobled hath the buskin'd stage.
But, O sad Virgin, that thy power
Might raise Musæus from his bower,
Or bid the soul of Orpheus sing
Such notes as, warbled to the string,
Drew iron tears down Pluto's cheek
And made Hell grant what Love did seek!
Or call up him that left half told
The story of Cambuscan bold,
Of Camball, and of Algarsife,
And who had Canacé to wife
That own'd the virtuous ring and glass;
And of the wondrous horse of brass
On which the Tartar king did ride:
And if aught else great bards beside
In sage and solemn tunes have sung
Of tourneys, and of trophies hung,
Of forests, and enchantments drear,
Where more is meant than meets the ear.
Thus, Night, oft see me in thy pale career,
Till civil-suited Morn appear,
Not trick'd and frounced as she was wont
With the Attic Boy to hunt,
But kercheft in a comely cloud
While rocking winds are piping loud,
Or usher'd with a shower still,
When the gust hath blown his fill,
Ending on the rustling leaves
With minute drops from off the eaves.
And when the sun begins to fling
His flaring beams, me, goddess, bring
To archéd walks of twilight groves,
And shadows brown, that Sylvan loves,
Of pine, or monumental oak,
Where the rude ax, with heavéd stroke,

Was never heard the nymphs to daunt
Or fright them from their hallow'd haunt.
There in close covert by some brook
Where no profaner eye may look,
Hide me from day's garish eye,
While the bee with honey'd thigh
That at her flowery work doth sing,
And the waters murmuring,
With such consort as they keep
Entice the dewy-feather'd Sleep;
And let some strange mysterious dream
Wave at his wings in airy stream
Of lively portraiture display'd,
Softly on my eyelids laid:
And, as I wake, sweet music breathe
Above, about, or underneath,
Sent by some Spirit to mortals good,
Or the unseen Genius of the wood.
  But let my due feet never fail
To walk the studious cloister's pale,
And love the high-embowéd roof,
With antique pillars massy proof,
And storied windows richly dight
Casting a dim religious light.
There let the pealing organ blow
To the full-voiced choir below
In service high and anthems clear,
As may with sweetness, through mine ear,
Dissolve me into ecstasies,
And bring all Heaven before mine eyes.
  And may at last my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
The hairy gown and mossy cell
Where I may sit and rightly spell
Of every star that heaven doth shew;
And every herb that sips the dew;
Till old experience do attain
To something like prophetic strain.

  These pleasures, Melancholy, give,
And I with thee will choose to live. J. Milton

146

SONG OF THE EMIGRANTS IN BERMUDA

Where the remote Bermudas ride
In the ocean's bosom unespied,
From a small boat that row'd along
The listening winds received this song.
"What should we do but sing His praise
That led us through the watery maze
Where He the huge sea-monsters wracks,
That lift the deep upon their backs,
Unto an isle so long unknown,
And yet far kinder than our own?
He lands us on a grassy stage,
Safe from the storms, and prelate's rage:
He gave us this eternal Spring
Which here enamels everything,
And sends the fowls to us in care
On daily visits through the air.
He hangs in shades the orange bright
Like golden lamps in a green night,
And does in the pomegranates close
Jewels more rich than Ormus shows:
He makes the figs our mouths to meet
And throws the melons at our feet;
But apples plants of such a price,
No tree could ever bear them twice.
With cedars chosen by His hand
From Lebanon He stores the land;
And makes the hollow seas that roar
Proclaim the ambergris on shore.
He cast (of which we rather boast)
The Gospel's pearl upon our coast;
And in these rocks for us did frame
A temple where to sound His name.
Oh! let our voice His praise exalt
Till it arrive at Heaven's vault,
Which thence (perhaps) rebounding may Echo beyond the Mexique bay!"
— Thus sang they in the English boat

A holy and a cheerful note:
And all the way, to guide their chime,
With falling oars they kept the time.

A. Marvell

147
AT A SOLEMN MUSIC

Blest pair of Sirens, pledges of Heaven's joy,
Sphere-born harmonious Sisters, Voice and Verse!
Wed your divine sounds, and mixed power employ,
Dead things with inbreathed sense able to pierce;
And to our high-raised phantasy present
That undisturbéd Song of pure consent
Aye sung before the sapphire-color'd throne
To Him that sits thereon,
With saintly shout and solemn jubilee;
Where the bright Seraphim in burning row
Their loud uplifted angel-trumpets blow;
And the Cherubic host in thousand choirs
Touch their immortal harps of golden wires,
With those just Spirits that wear victorious palms,
Hymns devout and holy psalms
Singing everlastingly:
That we on Earth, with undiscording voice
May rightly answer that melodious noise;
As once we did, till disproportion'd sin
Jarr'd against nature's chime, and with harsh din
Broke the fair music that all creatures made
To their great Lord, whose love their motion sway'd
In perfect diapason, whilst they stood
In first obedience, and their state of good.
O may we soon again renew that Song,
And keep in tune with Heaven, till God ere long
To His celestial consort us unite,
To live with Him, and sing in endless morn of light!

J. Milton

148

NOX NOCTI INDICAT SCIENTIAM

When I survey the bright
Celestial sphere:
So rich with jewels hung, that night
Doth like an Ethiop bride appear;

My soul her wings doth spread,
And heavenward flies,
The Almighty's mysteries to read
In the large volumes of the skies.

For the bright firmament
Shoots forth no flame
So silent, but is eloquent
In speaking the Creator's name.

No unregarded star
Contracts its light
Into so small a character,
Removed far from our human sight,

But if we steadfast look,
We shall discern
In it as in some holy book,
How man may heavenly knowledge learn.

It tells the Conqueror,
That far-stretch'd power
Which his proud dangers traffic for,
Is but the triumph of an hour.

That from the farthest North
Some nation may
Yet undiscover'd issue forth,
And o'er his new-got conquest sway.

Some nation yet shut in
With hills of ice,

May be let out to scourge his sin,
Till they shall equal him in vice.

And then they likewise shall
Their ruin have;
For as yourselves your Empires fall,
And every Kingdom hath a grave.

Thus those celestial fires,
Though seeming mute,
The fallacy of our desires
And all the pride of life, confute.

For they have watch'd since first
The world had birth:
And found sin in itself accursed,
And nothing permanent on earth.

W. Habington

149
HYMN TO DARKNESS

Hail thou most sacred venerable thing!
What Muse is worthy thee to sing?
Thee, from whose pregnant universal womb
All things, ev'n Light, thy rival, first did come.
What dares he not attempt that sings of thee,
Thou first and greatest mystery?
Who can the secrets of thy essence tell?
Thou, like the light of God, art inaccessible.

Before great Love this monument did raise,
This ample theater of praise;
Before the folding circles of the sky
Were tuned by Him, Who is all harmony;
Before the morning Stars their hymn began,
Before the council held for man,
Before the birth of either time or place,
Thou reign'st unquestion'd monarch in the empty space.

Thy native lot thou didst to Light resign,
But still half of the globe is thine.
Here with a quiet, but yet awful hand,
Like the best emperors thou dost command.
To thee the stars above their brightness owe,
And mortals their repose below:
To thy protection fear and sorrow flee,
And those that weary are of light, find rest in thee.

J. Norris of Bemerton

150

A VISION

I saw Eternity the other night,
Like a great ring of pure and endless light,
All calm, as it was bright: —
And round beneath it, Time, in hours, days, years,
Driven by the spheres,
Like a vast shadow moved; in which the World
And all her train were hurl'd.

H. Vaughan

151

ALEXANDER'S FEAST, OR, THE POWER OF MUSIC

'Twas at the royal feast for Persia won
By Philip's warlike son —
Aloft in awful state
The godlike hero sate
On his imperial throne;
His valiant peers were placed around,
Their brows with roses and with myrtles bound,
(So should desert in arms be crown'd);
The lovely Thais by his side
Sate like a blooming Eastern bride
In flower of youth and beauty's pride; —
Happy, happy, happy pair!
None but the brave
None but the brave
None but the brave deserves the fair!

Timotheus placed on high
Amid the tuneful choir
With flying fingers touch'd the lyre:
The trembling notes ascend the sky
And heavenly joys inspire.
The song began from Jove
Who left his blissful seats above —
Such is the power of mighty love!
A dragon's fiery form belied the god;
Sublime on radiant spires he rode
When he to fair Olympia prest,
And while he sought her snowy breast,
Then round her slender waist he curl'd,
And stamp'd an image of himself, a sovereign of the world.
— The listening crowd admire the lofty sound;
A present deity! they shout around:
A present deity! the vaulted roofs rebound:
With ravish'd ears
The monarch hears,
Assumes the god;
Affects to nod
And seems to shake the spheres.

The praise of Bacchus then the sweet musician sung,
Of Bacchus ever fair and ever young:
The jolly god in triumph comes;
Sound the trumpets, beat the drums!
Flush'd with a purple grace
He shows his honest face:
Now give the hautboys breath; he comes, he comes!
Bacchus, ever fair and young,
Drinking joys did first ordain;
Bacchus' blessings are a treasure,
Drinking is the soldier's pleasure:
Rich the treasure,
Sweet the pleasure,
Sweet is pleasure after pain.

Soothed with the sound, the king grew vain;
Fought all his battles o'er again,

And thrice he routed all his foes, and thrice he slew the slain!
The master saw the madness rise,
His glowing cheeks, his ardent eyes;
And while he Heaven and Earth defied
Changed his hand and check'd his pride.
He chose a mournful Muse
Soft pity to infuse:
He sang Darius great and good,
By too severe a fate
Fallen, fallen, fallen, fallen,
Fallen from his high estate.
And weltering in his blood;
Deserted at his utmost need
By those his former bounty fed;
On the bare earth exposed he lies
With not a friend to close his eyes.
— With downcast looks the joyless victor sate,
Revolving in his alter'd soul
The various turns of Chance below;
And now and then a sigh he stole,
And tears began to flow.

The mighty master smiled to see
That love was in the next degree;
'Twas but a kindred sound to move,
For pity melts the mind to love.
Softly sweet, in Lydian measures
Soon he soothed his soul to pleasures.
War, he sang, is toil and trouble,
Honor but an empty bubble,
Never ending, still beginning,
Fighting still, and still destroying;
If the world be worth thy winning,
Think, O think, it worth enjoying:
Lovely Thais sits beside thee,
Take the good the gods provide thee!
— The many rend the skies with loud applause;
So Love was crown'd, but Music won the cause.
The prince, unable to conceal his pain,

Gazed on the fair
Who caused his care,
And sigh'd and look'd, sigh'd and look'd,
Sigh'd and look'd, and sigh'd again:
At length with love and wine at once opprest
The vanquish'd victor sunk upon her breast.

Now strike the golden lyre again:
A louder yet, and yet a louder strain!
Break his bands of sleep asunder
And rouse him like a rattling peal of thunder.
Hark, hark! the horrid sound
Has raised up his head:
As awaked from the dead
And amazed he stares around.
Revenge, revenge, Timotheus cries,
See the Furies arise!
See the snakes that they rear
How they hiss in their hair,
And the sparkles that flash from their eyes!
Behold a ghastly band,
Each a torch in his hand!
Those are Grecian ghosts, that in battle were slain
And unburied remain
Inglorious on the plain:
Give the vengeance due
To the valiant crew!
Behold how they toss their torches on high,
How they point to the Persian abodes
And glittering temples of their hostile gods.
— The princes applaud with a furious joy:
And the King seized a flambeau with zeal to destroy;
Thais led the way
To light him to his prey,
And like another Helen, fired another Troy!
— Thus, long ago,
Ere heaving bellows learn'd to blow,
While organs yet were mute,
Timotheus, to his breathing flute
And sounding lyre

Could swell the soul to rage, or kindle soft desire.
At last divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame;
The sweet enthusiast from her sacred store
Enlarged the former narrow bounds,
And added length to solemn sounds,
With Nature's mother-wit, and arts unknown before.
— Let old Timotheus yield the prize
Or both divide the crown;
He raised a mortal to the skies;
She drew an angel down!

J. Dryden

BOOK THIRD

152

ODE ON THE PLEASURE ARISING FROM VICISSITUDE

Now the golden Morn aloft
  Waves her dew-bespangled wing;
With vermeil cheek and whisper soft
  She woos the tardy Spring:
Till April starts, and calls around
The sleeping fragrance from the ground,
And lightly o'er the living scene
Scatters his freshest, tenderest green.

New-born flocks, in rustic dance,
  Frisking ply their feeble feet;
Forgetful of their wintry trance
  The birds his presence greet:
But chief, the skylark warbles high
His trembling, thrilling ecstasy;
And lessening from the dazzled sight,
Melts into air and liquid light.

Yesterday the sullen year
  Saw the snowy whirlwind fly;
Mute was the music of the air,
  The herd stood drooping by:
Their raptures now that wildly flow
No yesterday nor morrow know;
'Tis Man alone that joy descries
With forward and reverted eyes.

Smiles on past misfortune's brow
  Soft reflection's hand can trace,
And o'er the cheek of sorrow throw
  A melancholy grace;

While hope prolongs our happier hour,
Or deepest shades, that dimly lour
And blacken round our weary way,
Gilds with a gleam of distant day.

Still, where rosy pleasure leads,
See a kindred grief pursue;
Behind the steps that misery treads
Approaching comfort view:
The hues of bliss more brightly glow
Chastised by sabler tints of woe,
And blended form, with artful strife,
The strength and harmony of life.

See the wretch that long has tost
On the thorny bed of pain,
At length repair his vigor lost
And breathe and walk again:
The meanest floweret of the vale,
The simplest note that swells the gale,
The common sun, the air, the skies,
To him are opening Paradise.

T. Gray

153
ODE TO SIMPLICITY

O Thou, by Nature taught
To breathe her genuine thought
In numbers warmly pure, and sweetly strong;
Who first, on mountains wild,
In Fancy, loveliest child,
Thy babe, or Pleasure's, nursed the powers of song!

Thou, who with hermit heart,
Disdain'st the wealth of art,
And gauds, and pageant weeds, and trailing pall,
But com'st, a decent maid
In Attic robe array'd,
O chaste, unboastful Nymph, to thee I call!

By all the honey'd store
On Hybla's thymy shore,
By all her blooms and mingled murmurs dear;
By her whose lovelorn woe
In evening musings slow
Soothed sweetly sad Electra's poet's ear:

By old Cephisus deep,
Who spread his wavy sweep
In warbled wanderings round thy green retreat;
On whose enamell'd side,
When holy Freedom died,
No equal haunt allured thy future feet: —

O sister meek of Truth,
To my admiring youth
Thy sober aid and native charms infuse!
The flowers that sweetest breathe,
Though Beauty cull'd the wreath,
Still ask thy hand to range their order'd hues.

While Rome could none esteem
But Virtue's patriot theme,
You loved her hills, and led her laureate band;
But stay'd to sing alone
To one distinguish'd throne;
And turn'd thy face, and fled her alter'd land.

No more, in hall or bower,
The Passions own thy power;
Love, only Love, her forceless numbers mean:
For thou hast left her shrine;
Nor olive more, nor vine,
Shall gain thy feet to bless the servile scene.

Though taste, though genius, bless
To some divine excess,
Faints the cold work till thou inspire the whole;
What each, what all supply
May court, may charm our eye;
Thou, only thou, canst raise the meeting soul!

Of these let others ask
To aid some mighty task;
I only seek to find thy temperate vale;
Where oft my reed might sound
To maids and shepherds round,
And all thy sons, O Nature! learn my tale.

W. Collins

154
SOLITUDE

Happy the man, whose wish and care
A few paternal acres bound,
Content to breathe his native air
In his own ground.

Whose herds with milk, whose fields with bread,
Whose flocks supply him with attire;
Whose trees in summer yield him shade,
In winter fire.

Blest, who can unconcern'dly find
Hours, days, and years, slide soft away
In health of body, peace of mind,
Quiet by day,

Sound sleep by night; study and ease
Together mixed, sweet recreation,
And innocence, which most does please
With meditation.

Thus let me live, unseen, unknown;
Thus unlamented let me die;
Steal from the world, and not a stone
Tell where I lie.

A. Pope

155
THE BLIND BOY

O say what is that thing call'd Light,
Which I must ne'er enjoy;
What are the blessings of the sight,
O tell your poor blind boy!

You talk of wondrous things you see,
You say the sun shines bright;
I feel him warm, but how can he
Or make it day or night?

My day or night myself I make
Whene'er I sleep or play;
And could I ever keep awake
With me 'twere always day.

With heavy sighs I often hear
You mourn my hapless woe;
But sure with patience I can bear
A loss I ne'er can know.

Then let not what I cannot have
My cheer of mind destroy:
Whilst thus I sing, I am a king,
Although a poor blind boy.

C. Cibber

156
ON A FAVORITE CAT, DROWNED IN A TUB OF GOLDFISHES

'Twas on a lofty vase's side,
Where China's gayest art had dyed
The azure flowers that blow,
Demurest of the tabby kind
The pensive Selima, reclined,
Gazed on the lake below.

Her conscious tail her joy declared:
The fair round face, the snowy beard,
The velvet of her paws,
Her coat that with the tortoise vies,
Her ears of jet, and emerald eyes —
She saw, and purr'd applause.

Still had she gazed, but 'midst the tide
Two angel forms were seen to glide,
The Genii of the stream:
Their scaly armor's Tyrian hue
Through richest purple, to the view
Betray'd a golden gleam.

The hapless Nymph with wonder saw:
A whisker first, and then a claw
With many an ardent wish
She stretch'd, in vain, to reach the prize —
What female heart can gold despise?
What Cat's averse to fish?

Presumptuous maid! with looks intent
Again she stretch'd, again she bent,
Nor knew the gulf between —
Malignant Fate sat by and smiled —
The slippery verge her feet beguiled;
She tumbled headlong in!

Eight times emerging from the flood
She mew'd to every watery God
Some speedy aid to send: —
No Dolphin came, no Nereid stirr'd,
Nor cruel Tom nor Susan heard —
A favorite has no friend!

From hence, ye Beauties! undeceived
Know one false step is ne'er retrieved,
And be with caution bold:
Not all that tempts your wandering eyes
And heedless hearts, is lawful prize,
Nor all that glisters, gold!

T. Gray

157
TO CHARLOTTE PULTENEY

Timely blossom, Infant fair,
Fondling of a happy pair,
Every morn and every night
Their solicitous delight,
Sleeping, waking, still at ease,
Pleasing, without skill to please;
Little gossip, blithe and hale,
Tattling many a broken tale,
Singing many a tuneless song,
Lavish of a heedless tongue;
Simple maiden, void of art,
Babbling out the very heart,
Yet abandon'd to thy will,
Yet imagining no ill,
Yet too innocent to blush;
Like the linnet in the bush
To the mother linnet's note
Moduling her slender throat;
Chirping forth thy petty joys,
Wanton in the change of toys,
Like the linnet green, in May
Flitting to each bloomy spray;
Wearied then and glad of rest,
Like the linnet in the nest: —
This thy present happy lot
This, in time will be forgot:
Other pleasures, other cares,
Ever-busy Time prepares;
And thou shalt in thy daughter see,
This picture, once, resembled thee.

A. Philips

158
RULE BRITANNIA

When Britain first at Heaven's command
Arose from out the azure main,

This was the charter of her land,
And guardian angels sang the strain:
Rule, Britannia! Britannia rules the waves!
Britons never shall be slaves.

The nations not so blest as thee
Must in their turn to tyrants fall,
Whilst thou shalt flourish great and free
The dread and envy of them all.

Still more majestic shalt thou rise,
More dreadful from each foreign stroke;
As the loud blast that tears the skies
Serves but to root thy native oak.

Thee haughty tyrants ne'er shall tame;
All their attempts to bend thee down
Will but arouse thy generous flame,
And work their woe and thy renown.

To thee belongs the rural reign;
Thy cities shall with commerce shine;
All thine shall be the subject main,
And every shore it circles thine!

The Muses, still with Freedom found,
Shall to thy happy coast repair;
Blest Isle, with matchless beauty crown'd
And manly hearts to guard the fair: —
Rule, Britannia! Britannia rules the waves!
Britons never shall be slaves!

J. Thomson

159
THE BARD
PINDARIC ODE

"Ruin seize thee, ruthless King!
Confusion on thy banners wait;
Tho' fann'd by Conquest's crimson wing
They mock the air with idle state.

Helm, nor hauberk's twisted mail,
Nor e'en thy virtues, Tyrant, shall avail
To save thy secret soul from nightly fears,
From Cambria's curse, from Cambria's tears!"
— Such were the sounds that o'er the crested pride
  Of the first Edward scatter'd wild dismay,
As down the steep of Snowdon's shaggy side
  He wound with toilsome march his long array: —
Stout Glo'ster stood aghast in speechless trance;
"To arms!" cried Mortimer, and couch'd his quivering lance.

  On a rock, whose haughty brow
Frowns o'er old Conway's foaming flood,
  Robed in the sable garb of woe
With haggard eyes the Poet stood;
(Loose his beard and hoary hair
Stream'd like a meteor to the troubled air)
And with a master's hand and prophet's fire
Struck the deep sorrows of his lyre:
  "Hark, how each giant oak and desert cave
Sighs to the torrent's awful voice beneath!
O'er thee, oh King! their hundred arms they wave,
  Revenge on thee in hoarser murmurs breathe;
Vocal no more, since Cambria's fatal day,
To highborn Hoel's harp, or soft Llewellyn's lay.

  "Cold is Cadwallo's tongue,
  That hushed the stormy main:
Brave Urien sleeps upon his craggy bed:
  Mountains, ye mourn in vain
  Modred, whose magic song
Made huge Plinlimmon bow his cloud-topt head.
  On dreary Arvon's shore they lie
Smear'd with gore and ghastly pale:
Far, far aloof the affrighted ravens sail;
  The famish'd eagle screams, and passes by.
Dear lost companions of my tuneful art,
  Dear as the light that visits these sad eyes,
Dear as the ruddy drops that warm my heart,
  Ye died amidst your dying country's cries —

No more I weep; They do not sleep;
On yonder cliffs, a grisly band,
I see them sit; They linger yet,
Avengers of their native land:
With me in dreadful harmony they join,
And weave with bloody hands the tissue of thy line.

"Weave the warp and weave the woof
The winding sheet of Edward's race:
Give ample room and verge enough
The characters of hell to trace.
Mark the year, and mark the night,
When Seven shall reëcho with affright
The shrieks of death thro' Berkley's roof that ring,
Shrieks of an agonizing king!
She-wolf of France, with unrelenting fangs
That tear'st the bowels of thy mangled mate,
From thee be born, who o'er thy country hangs
The scourge of heaven! What terrors round him wait!
Amazement in his van, with flight combined,
And sorrow's faded form, and solitude behind.

"Mighty victor, mighty lord,
Low on his funeral couch he lies!
No pitying heart, no eye, afford
A tear to grace his obsequies.
Is the sable warrior fled?
Thy son is gone. He rests among the dead.
The swarm that in thy noontide beam were born?
— Gone to salute the rising morn.
Fair laughs the Morn, and soft the zephyr blows,
While proudly riding o'er the azure realm.
In gallant trim the gilded vessel goes:
Youth on the prow, and Pleasure at the helm:
Regardless of the sweeping whirlwind's sway,
That hush'd in grim repose expects his evening prey.

"Fill high the sparkling bowl,
The rich repast prepare;
Reft of a crown, he yet may share the feast:

Close by the regal chair
Fell Thirst and Famine scowl
A baleful smile upon their baffled guest,
Heard ye the din of battle bray,
Lance to lance, and horse to horse?
Long years of havoc urge their destined course,
And thro' the kindred squadrons mow their way.
Ye towers of Julius, London's lasting shame,
With many a foul and midnight murder fed,
Revere his consort's faith, his father's fame,
And spare the meek usurper's holy head!
Above, below, the rose of snow,
Twined with her blushing foe, we spread:
The bristled boar in infant gore
Wallows beneath the thorny shade.
Now, brothers, bending o'er the accurséd loom,
Stamp we our vengeance deep, and ratify his doom.

"Edward, lo! to sudden fate
(Weave we the woof; The thread is spun;)
Half of thy heart we consecrate.
(The web is wove; The work is done.)
— Stay, oh stay! nor thus forlorn
Leave me unbless'd, unpitied, here to mourn:
In yon bright track that fires the western skies
They melt, they vanish from my eyes.
But oh! what solemn scenes on Snowdon's height
Descending slow their glittering skirts unroll?
Visions of glory, spare my aching sight,
Ye unborn ages, crowd not on my soul!
No more our long-lost Arthur we bewail: —
All hail! ye genuine kings! Britannia's issue, hail!

"Girt with many a baron bold
Sublime their starry fronts they rear;
And gorgeous dames, and statesmen old
In bearded majesty, appear.
In the midst a form divine!
Her eye proclaims her of the Briton line:

Her lion port, her awe-commanding face
Attemper'd sweet to virgin grace.
What strings symphonious tremble in the air,
What strains of vocal transport round her play?
Hear from the grave, great Taliessin, hear;
They breathe a soul to animate thy clay.
Bright Rapture calls, and soaring as she sings,
Waves in the eye of heaven her many-color'd wings.

"The verse adorn again
Fierce war, and faithful love,
And truth severe, by fairy fiction drest.
In buskin'd measures move
Pale grief, and pleasing pain,
With horror, tyrant of the throbbing breast.
A voice as of the cherub choir
Gales from blooming Eden bear,
And distant warblings lessen on my ear
That lost in long futurity expire.
Fond impious man, think'st thou yon sanguine cloud
Raised by thy breath, has quenched the orb of day?
To-morrow he repairs the golden flood
And warms the nations with redoubled ray.
Enough for me: with joy I see
The different doom our fates assign:
Be thine despair and sceptered care,
To triumph and so die are mine."
— He spoke, and headlong from the mountain's height
Deep in the roaring tide he plunged to endless night.

T. Gray

160

ODE WRITTEN IN 1746

How sleep the brave, who sink to rest
By all their country's wishes blest!
When Spring, with dewy fingers cold,
Returns to deck their hallow'd mold,
She there shall dress a sweeter sod
Than Fancy's feet have ever trod.

By fairy hands their knell is rung,
By forms unseen their dirge is sung:
There Honor comes, a pilgrim gray,
To bless the turf that wraps their clay;
And Freedom shall awhile repair
To dwell a weeping hermit there!

W. Collins

161
LAMENT FOR CULLODEN

The lovely lass o' Inverness,
Nae joy nor pleasure can she see;
For e'en and morn she cries, Alas!
And aye the saut tear blins her ee:
Drumossie moor — Drumossie day —
A waefu' day it was to me!
For there I lost my father dear,
My father dear, and brethren three.

Their winding-sheet the bluidy clay,
Their graves are growing green to see:
And by them lies the dearest lad
That ever blest a woman's ee!
Now wae to thee, thou cruel lord,
A bluidy man I trow thou be;
For mony a heart thou hast made sair
That ne'er did wrang to thine or thee.

R. Burns

162
LAMENT FOR FLODDEN

I've heard them lilting at our ewe-milking,
Lasses a' lilting before dawn o' day;
But now they are moaning on ilka green loaning —
The Flowers of the Forest are a' wede away.

At bughts, in the morning, nae blythe lads are scorning,
Lasses are lonely and dowie and wae;

Nae daffin', nae gabbin', but sighing and sabbing,
Ilk ane lifts her leglin and hies her away.

In har'st, at the shearing, nae youths now are jeering,
Bandsters are lyart, and runkled, and gray;
At fair or at preaching, nae wooing, nae fleeching —
The Flowers of the Forest are a' wede away.

At e'en, in the gloaming, nae younkers are roaming
'Bout stacks wi' the lasses at bogle to play;
But ilk ane sits drearie, lamenting her dearie —
The Flowers of the Forest are weded away.

Dool and wae for the order, sent our lads to the Border!
The English, for ance, by guile wan the day;
The Flowers of the Forest, that fought aye the foremost,
The prime of our land, are cauld in the clay.

We'll hear nae mair lilting at the ewe-milking;
Women and bairns are heartless and wae;
Sighing and moaning on ilka green loaning —
The Flowers of the Forest are a' wede away.

J. Elliot

163

THE BRAES OF YARROW

Thy braes were bonny, Yarrow stream,
When first on them I met my lover;
Thy braes how dreary, Yarrow stream,
When now thy waves his body cover!
Forever now, O Yarrow stream!
Thou art to me a stream of sorrow;
For never on thy banks shall I
Behold my Love, the flower of Yarrow!

He promised me a milk-white steed
To bear me to his father's bowers;
He promised me a little page
To squire me to his father's towers;

He promised me a wedding ring, —
The wedding day was fix'd to-morrow; —
Now he is wedded to his grave,
Alas, his watery grave, in Yarrow!

Sweet were his words when last we met;
My passion I as freely told him;
Clasp'd in his arms, I little thought
That I should nevermore behold him!
Scarce was he gone, I saw his ghost;
It vanish'd with a shriek of sorrow;
Thrice did the water wraith ascend,
And gave a doleful groan thro' Yarrow.

His mother from the window look'd
With all the longing of a mother;
His little sister weeping walk'd
The green-wood path to meet her brother;
They sought him east, they sought him west,
They sought him all the forest thorough;
They only saw the cloud of night,
They only heard the roar of Yarrow.

No longer from thy window look —
Thou hast no son, thou tender mother!
No longer walk, thou lovely maid; —
Alas, thou hast no more a brother!
No longer seek him east or west
And search no more the forest thorough;
For, wandering in the night so dark,
He fell a lifeless corpse in Yarrow.

The tear shall never leave my cheek,
No other youth shall be my marrow —
I'll seek thy body in the stream,
And then with thee I'll sleep in Yarrow.
— The tear did never leave her cheek,
No other youth became her marrow;
She found his body in the stream,
And now with him she sleeps in Yarrow.

J. Logan

164
WILLY DROWNED IN YARROW

Down in yon garden sweet and gay
  Where bonnie grows the lily,
I heard a fair maid sighing say,
  "My wish be wi' sweet Willie!

"Willie's rare, and Willie's fair,
  And Willie's wondrous bonny;
And Willie hecht to marry me
  Gin e'er he married ony.

"O gentle wind, that bloweth south
  From where my Love repaireth,
Convey a kiss frae his dear mouth
  And tell me how he fareth!

"O tell sweet Willie to come doun
  And hear the mavis singing,
And see the birds on ilka bush
  And leaves around them hinging.

"The lav'rock there, wi' her white breast
  And gentle throat sae narrow;
There's sport eneuch for gentlemen
  On Leader haughs and Yarrow.

"O Leader haughs are wide and braid
  And Yarrow haughs are bonny;
There Willie hecht to marry me
  If e'er he married ony.

"But Willie's gone, whom I thought on,
  And does not hear me weeping;
Draws many a tear frae true love's e'e
  When other maids are sleeping.

"Yestreen I made my bed fu' braid,
  The night I'll mak' it narrow,

For a' the live-lang winter night
I lie twined o' my marrow.

"O came ye by yon water-side?
Pou'd you the rose or lily?
Or came you by yon meadow green,
Or saw you my sweet Willie?"

She sought him up, she sought him down,
She sought him braid and narrow;
Syne, in the cleaving of a craig,
She found him drown'd in Yarrow!

Anon.

165
LOSS OF THE ROYAL GEORGE

Toll for the Brave!
The brave that are no more!
All sunk beneath the wave
Fast by their native shore!

Eight hundred of the brave
Whose courage well was tried,
Had made the vessel heel
And laid her on her side.

A land breeze shook the shrouds
And she was overset;
Down went the Royal George,
With all her crew complete.

Toll for the brave!
Brave Kempenfelt is gone;
His last sea fight is fought,
His work of glory done.

It was not in the battle;
No tempest gave the shock;
She sprang no fatal leak,
She ran upon no rock.

His sword was in its sheath,
His fingers held the pen,
When Kempenfelt went down
With twice four hundred men.

— Weigh the vessel up
Once dreaded by our foes!
And mingle with our cup
The tears that England owes.

Her timbers yet are sound,
And she may float again
Full charged with England's thunder,
And plow the distant main:

But Kempenfelt is gone,
His victories are o'er;
And he and his eight hundred
Shall plow the wave no more.

W. Cowper

166

BLACK-EYED SUSAN

All in the Downs the fleet was moor'd,
The streamers waving in the wind,
When black-eyed Susan came aboard;
"O! where shall I my true-love find?
Tell me, ye jovial sailors, tell me true
If my sweet William sails among the crew."

William, who high upon the yard
Rock'd with the billow to and fro,
Soon as her well-known voice he heard
He sigh'd, and cast his eyes below:
The cord slides swiftly through his glowing hands,
And quick as lightning on the deck he stands.

So the sweet lark, high poised in air,
Shuts close his pinions to his breast

If chance his mate's shrill call he hear,
And drops at once into her nest: —
The noblest captain in the British fleet
Might envy William's lip those kisses sweet.

"O Susan, Susan, lovely dear,
My vows shall ever true remain;
Let me kiss off that falling tear;
We only part to meet again.
Change as ye list, ye winds; my heart shall be
The faithful compass that still points to thee.

"Believe not what the landmen say
Who tempt with doubts thy constant mind;
They'll tell thee, sailors, when away,
In every port a mistress find:
Yes, yes, believe them when they tell thee so,
For Thou art present wheresoe'er I go.

"If to fair India's coast we sail,
Thy eyes are seen in diamonds bright,
Thy breath is Afric's spicy gale,
Thy skin is ivory so white.
Thus every beauteous object that I view
Wakes in my soul some charm of lovely Sue.

"Though battle call me from thy arms
Let not my pretty Susan mourn;
Though cannons roar, yet safe from harms
William shall to his Dear return.
Love turns aside the balls that round me fly,
Lest precious tears should drop from Susan's eye."

The boatswain gave the dreadful word,
The sails their swelling bosom spread,
No longer must she stay aboard;
They kiss'd, she sigh'd, he hung his head.
Her lessening boat unwilling rows to land;
"Adieu!" she cries; and waved her lily hand.

J. Gay

167
SALLY IN OUR ALLEY

Of all the girls that are so smart
There's none like pretty Sally;
She is the darling of my heart,
And she lives in our alley.
There is no lady in the land
Is half so sweet as Sally;
She is the darling of my heart,
And she lives in our alley.

Her father he makes cabbage nets
And through the streets does cry 'em;
Her mother she sells laces long
To such as please to buy 'em;
But sure such folks could ne'er beget
So sweet a girl as Sally!
She is the darling of my heart,
And she lives in our alley.

When she is by, I leave my work,
I love her so sincerely;
My master comes like any Turk,
And bangs me most severely —
But let him bang his bellyful,
I'll bear it all for Sally;
She is the darling of my heart,
And she lives in our alley.

Of all the days that's in the week
I dearly love but one day —
And that's the day that comes betwixt
A Saturday and Monday;
For then I'm drest all in my best
To walk abroad with Sally;
She is the darling of my heart,
And she lives in our alley.

My master carries me to church,
And often am I blamed

Because I leave him in the lurch
As soon as text is named;
I leave the church in sermon time
And slink away to Sally;
She is the darling of my heart,
And she lives in our alley.

When Christmas comes about again
O then I shall have money;
I'll hoard it up, and box it all,
I'll give it to my honey:
I would it were ten thousand pound,
I'd give it all to Sally;
She is the darling of my heart,
And she lives in our alley.

My master and the neighbors all
Make game of me and Sally,
And, but for her, I'd better be
A slave and row a galley;
But when my seven long years are out
O then I'll marry Sally, —
O then we'll wed, and then we'll bed . . .
But not in our alley!

H. Carey

168

A FAREWELL

Go fetch to me a pint o' wine,
An' fill it in a silver tassie;
That I may drink before I go
A service to my bonnie lassie:
The boat rocks at the pier o' Leith,
Fu' loud the wind blaws frae the ferry,
The ship rides by the Berwick-law,
And I maun leave my bonnie Mary.

The trumpets sound, the banners fly,
The glittering spears are rankéd ready;

The shouts o' war are heard afar.
The battle closes thick and bloody;
But it's not the roar o' sea or shore
Wad make me langer wish to tarry;
Nor shout o' war that's heard afar —
It's leaving thee, my bonnie Mary.

R. Burns

169

If doughty deeds my lady please
Right soon I'll mount my steed;
And strong his arm, and fast his seat
That bears frae me the meed.
I'll wear thy colors in my cap,
Thy picture at my heart;
And he that bends not to thine eye
Shall rue it to his smart!
Then tell me how to woo thee, Love;
O tell me how to woo thee!
For thy dear sake, nae care I'll take
Tho' ne'er another trow me.

If gay attire delight thine eye
I'll dight me in array;
I'll tend thy chamber door all night,
And squire thee all the day.
If sweetest sound can win thine ear,
These sounds I'll strive to catch;
Thy voice I'll steal to woo thysell,
That voice that nane can match.

But if fond love thy heart can gain,
I never broke a vow;
Nae maiden lays her skaith to me,
I never loved but you.
For you alone I ride the ring,
For you I wear the blue;
For you alone I strive to sing,
O tell me how to woo!

Then tell me how to woo thee, Love;
O tell me how to woo thee!
For thy dear sake, nae care I'll take,
Tho' ne'er another trow me.

R. Graham of Gartmore

170

TO A YOUNG LADY

Sweet stream, that winds through yonder glade,
Apt emblem of a virtuous maid —
Silent and chaste she steals along,
Far from the world's gay busy throng:
With gentle yet prevailing force,
Intent upon her destined course;
Graceful and useful all she does.
Blessing and blest where'er she goes;
Pure-bosom'd as that watery glass,
And Heaven reflected in her face.

W. Cowper

171

THE SLEEPING BEAUTY

Sleep on, and dream of Heaven awhile —
Tho' shut so close thy laughing eyes,
Thy rosy lips still wear a smile
And move, and breathe delicious sighs!

Ah, now soft blushes tinge her cheeks
And mantle o'er her neck of snow:
Ah, now she murmurs, now she speaks
What most I wish — and fear to know!

She starts, she trembles, and she weeps!
Her fair hands folded on her breast:
— And now, how like a saint she sleeps!
A seraph in the realms of rest!

Sleep on secure! Above control
Thy thoughts belong to Heaven and thee:

And may the secret of thy soul
Remain within its sanctuary!

S. Rogers

172

Forever, Fortune, wilt thou prove
An unrelenting foe to Love,
And when we meet a mutual heart
Come in between, and bid us part?

Bid us sigh on from day to day,
And wish and wish the soul away;
Till youth and genial years are flown,
And all the life of life is gone?

But busy, busy, still art thou,
To bind the loveless joyless vow,
The heart from pleasure to delude,
To join the gentle to the rude.

For once, O Fortune, hear my prayer,
And I absolve thy future care;
All other blessings I resign,
Make but the dear Amanda mine

J. Thomson

173

The merchant, to secure his treasure,
Conveys it in a borrow'd name:
Euphelia serves to grace my measure,
But Cloe is my real flame.

My softest verse, my darling lyre
Upon Euphelia's toilet lay —
When Cloe noted her desire
That I should sing, that I should play.

My lyre I tune, my voice I raise,
But with my numbers mix my sighs;
And whilst I sing Euphelia's praise,
I fix my soul on Cloe's eyes.

Fair Cloe blush'd: Euphelia frown'd:
I sang, and gazed; I play'd, and trembled:
And Venus to the Loves around
Remark'd how ill we all dissembled.

M. Prior

174

LOVE'S SECRET

Never seek to tell thy love,
Love that never told can be;
For the gentle wind doth move
Silently, invisibly.

I told my love, I told my love,
I told her all my heart,
Trembling, cold, in ghastly fears: —
Ah! she did depart.

Soon after she was gone from me
A traveler came by,
Silently, invisibly:
He took her with a sigh.

W. Blake

175

When lovely woman stoops to folly
And finds too late that men betray, —
What charm can soothe her melancholy
What art can wash her guilt away?

The only art her guilt to cover,
To hide her shame from every eye,
To give repentance to her lover
And wring his bosom, is — to die.

O. Goldsmith

176

Ye banks and braes o' bonnie Doon
How can ye blume sae fair!

How can ye chant, ye little birds,
And I sae fu' o' care!

Thou'll break my heart, thou bonnie bird
That sings upon the bough;
Thou minds me o' the happy days
When my fause Luve was true.

Thou'll break my heart, thou bonnie bird
That sings beside thy mate;
For sae I sat, and sae I sang,
And wist na o' my fate.

Aft hae I roved by bonnie Doon
To see the woodbine twine,
And ilka bird sang o' its love;
And sae did I o' mine.

Wi' lightsome heart I pu'd a rose,
Frae aff its thorny tree;
And my fause luver staw the rose,
But left the thorn wi' me.

R. Burns

177

THE PROGRESS OF POESY

A PINDARIC ODE

Awake, Æolian lyre, awake,
And give to rapture all thy trembling strings.
From Helicon's harmonious springs
A thousand rills their mazy progress take;
The laughing flowers that round them blow
Drink life and fragrance as they flow.
Now the rich stream of music winds along
Deep, majestic, smooth, and strong,
Thro' verdant vales, and Ceres' golden reign;
Now rolling down the steep amain
Headlong, impetuous, see it pour:
The rocks and nodding groves re-bellow to the roar.

Oh! Sovereign of the willing soul,
Parent of sweet and solemn-breathing airs,
Enchanting shell! the sullen Cares
And frantic Passions hear thy soft control.
On Thracia's hills the Lord of War
Has curb'd the fury of his car
And dropt his thirsty lance at thy command.
Perching on the sceptered hand
Of Jove, thy magic lulls the feather'd king
With ruffled plumes, and flagging wing:
Quench'd in dark clouds of slumber lie
The terror of his beak, and lightnings of his eye.

Thee the voice, the dance, obey
Temper'd to thy warbled lay.
O'er Idalia's velvet-green
The rosy-crownéd Loves are seen
On Cytherea's day;
With antic Sport, and blue-eyed Pleasures,
Frisking light in frolic measures;
Now pursuing, now retreating,
Now in circling troops they meet:
To brisk notes in cadence beating
Glance their many-twinkling feet.
Slow melting strains their Queen's approach declare:
Where'er she turns, the Graces homage pay:
With arms sublime that float upon the air
In gliding state she wins her easy way:
O'er her warm cheek and rising bosom move
The bloom of young Desire and purple light of Love.

Man's feeble race what ills await!
Labor, and Penury, the racks of Pain,
Disease, and Sorrow's weeping train,
And Death, sad refuge from the storms of fate!
The fond complaint, my song, disprove,
And justify the laws of Jove.
Say, has he given in vain the heavenly Muse?
Night, and all her sickly dews,
Her specters wan, and birds of boding cry

He gives to range the dreary sky:
Till down the eastern cliffs afar
Hyperion's march they spy, and glittering shafts of war.

In climes beyond the solar road
Where shaggy forms o'er ice-built mountains roam,
The Muse has broke the twilight gloom
To cheer the shivering native's dull abode.
And oft, beneath the odorous shade
Of Chili's boundless forests laid,
She deigns to hear the savage youth repeat
In loose numbers wildly sweet
Their feather-cinctured chiefs, and dusky loves.
Her track, where'er the goddess roves,
Glory pursue, and generous Shame,
Th' unconquerable Mind, and Freedom's holy flame.

Woods, that wave o'er Delphi's steep,
Isles, that crown th' Ægean deep,
Fields that cool Ilissus laves,
Or where Mæander's amber waves
In lingering labyrinths creep,
How do your tuneful echoes languish,
Mute, but to the voice of anguish!
Where each old poetic mountain
Inspiration breathed around;
Every shade and hallow'd fountain
Murmur'd deep a solemn sound:
Till the sad Nine, in Greece's evil hour
Left their Parnassus for the Latian plains.
Alike they scorn the pomp of tyrant Power,
And coward Vice, that revels in her chains.
When Latium had her lofty spirit lost,
They sought, oh Albion! next, thy sea-encircled coast.

Far from the sun and summer gale
In thy green lap was Nature's Darling laid,
What time, where lucid Avon stray'd,
To him the mighty Mother did unveil
Her awful face: the dauntless child

Stretch'd forth his little arms, and smiled.
"This pencil take" (she said), "whose colors clear
Richly paint the vernal year:
Thine, too, these golden keys, immortal Boy!
This can unlock the gates of joy;
Of horror that, and thrilling fears,
Or ope the sacred source of sympathetic tears."

Nor second He, that rode sublime
Upon the seraph-wings of Ecstasy
The secrets of the abyss to spy:
He pass'd the flaming bounds of place and time:
The living Throne, the sapphire-blaze
Where angels tremble while they gaze,
He saw; but blasted with excess of light,
Closed his eyes in endless night.
Behold where Dryden's less presumptuous car
Wide o'er the fields of glory bear
Two coursers of ethereal race,
With necks in thunder clothed, and long-resounding pace.

Hark, his hands the lyre explore!
Bright-eyed Fancy, hovering o'er,
Scatters from her pictured urn
Thoughts that breathe, and words that burn.
But ah! 'tis heard no more —
Oh! lyre divine, what daring spirit
Wakes thee now? Tho' he inherit
Nor the pride, nor ample pinion,
That the Theban eagle bear,
Sailing with supreme dominion
Thro' the azure deep of air:
Yet oft before his infant eyes would run
Such forms as glitter in the Muse's ray
With orient hues, unborrow'd of the sun:
Yet shall he mount, and keep his distant way
Beyond the limits of a vulgar fate:
Beneath the Good how far — but far above the Great.

T. Gray

178
THE PASSIONS
AN ODE FOR MUSIC

When Music, heavenly maid, was young,
While yet in early Greece she sung.
The Passions oft, to hear her shell,
Throng'd around her magic cell
Exulting, trembling, raging, fainting,
Possest beyond the Muse's painting;
By turns they felt the glowing mind
Disturb'd, delighted, raised, refined;
'Til once, 'tis said, when all were fired,
Fill'd with fury, rapt, inspired,
From the supporting myrtles round
They snatch'd her instruments of sound,
And, as they oft had heard apart
Sweet lessons of her forceful art,
Each (for Madness ruled the hours)
Would prove his own expressive power.

First Fear his hand, its skill to try,
Amid the chords bewilder'd laid,
And back recoil'd, he knew not why,
E'en at the sound himself had made.

Next Anger rush'd, his eyes on fire,
In lightnings, own'd his secret stings;
In one rude clash he struck the lyre
And swept with hurried hand the strings.

With woeful measures wan Despair,
Low sullen sounds, his grief beguiled;
A solemn, strange, and mingled air,
'Twas sad by fits, by starts 'twas wild.

But thou, O Hope, with eyes so fair,
What was thy delighted measure?
Still it whisper'd promised pleasure
And bade the lovely scenes at distance hail!

Still would her touch the strain prolong;
And from the rocks, the woods, the vale
She call'd on Echo still through all the song;
And, where her sweetest theme she chose,
A soft responsive voice was heard at every close;
And Hope enchanted smiled, and waved her golden hair; —

And longer had she sung: — but with a frown
Revenge impatient rose:
He threw his blood-stain'd sword in thunder down;
And with a withering look
The war-denouncing trumpet took
And blew a blast so loud and dread,
Were ne'er prophetic sounds so full of woe!
And ever and anon he beat
The doubling drum with furious heat;
And, though sometimes, each dreary pause between,
Dejected Pity at his side
Her soul-subduing voice applied,
Yet still he kept his wild unalter'd mien,
While each strain'd ball of sight seem'd bursting from his head.

Thy numbers, Jealousy, to naught were fix'd:
Sad proof of thy distressful state!
Of differing themes the veering songs was mix'd;
And now it courted Love, now raving call'd on Hate.

With eyes upraised, as one inspired,
Pale Melancholy sat retired;
And from her wild sequester'd seat,
In notes by distance made more sweet,
Pour'd through the mellow horn her pensive soul:
And dashing soft from rocks around
Bubbling runnels join'd the sound;
Through glades and glooms the mingled measure stole,
Or, o'er some haunted stream, with fond delay,
Round an holy calm diffusing,
Love of peace, and lonely musing,
In hollow murmurs died away.

But O! how alter'd was its sprightlier tone
When Cheerfulness, a nymph of healthiest hue,
  Her bow across her shoulder flung,
  Her buskins gemm'd with morning dew,
Blew an inspiring air, that dale and thicket rung,
  The hunter's call to Faun and Dryad known!
The oak-crown'd Sisters and their chaste-eyed Queen,
  Satyrs and Sylvan Boys, were seen
  Peeping from forth their alleys green:
Brown Exercise rejoiced to hear;
  And Sport leaped up, and seized his beechen spear.

Last came Joy's ecstatic trial:
He, with viny crown advancing,
  First to the lively pipe his hand addrest:
But soon he saw the brisk awakening viol
  Whose sweet entrancing voice he loved the best:
They would have thought who heard the strain
    They saw, in Tempe's vale, her native maids
    Amidst the festal-sounding shades
To some unwearied minstrel dancing;
While, as his flying fingers kiss'd the strings,
  Love framed with Mirth a gay fantastic round:
  Loose were her tresses seen, her zone unbound;
  And he, amidst his frolic play,
  As if he would the charming air repay,
Shook thousand odors from his dewy wings.

O Music! Sphere-descended maid,
Friend of Pleasure, Wisdom's aid!
Why, goddess! why, to us denied,
Lay'st thou thy ancient lyre aside?
As in that loved Athenian bower
You learn'd an all-commanding power,
Thy mimic soul, O Nymph endear'd,
Can well recall what then it heard.
Where is thy native simple heart
Devote to Virtue, Fancy, Art?
Arise, as in that elder time.
Warm, energic, chaste, sublime!

Thy wonders, in that godlike age,
Fill thy recording Sister's page; —
'Tis said, and I believe the tale,
Thy humblest reed could more prevail,
Had more of strength, diviner rage,
Than all which charms this laggard age:
E'en all at once together found,
Cecilia's mingled world of sound: —
O bid our vain endeavors cease:
Revive the just designs of Greece:
Return in all thy simple state!
Confirm the tales her sons relate!

W. Collins

179
THE SONG OF DAVID

He sang of God, the mighty source
Of all things, the stupendous force
On which all strength depends:
From Whose right arm, beneath Whose eyes,
All period, power, and enterprise
Commences, reigns, and ends.

The world, the clustering spheres He made,
The glorious light, the soothing shade,
Dale, champaign, grove and hill:
The multitudinous abyss,
Where secrecy remains in bliss,
And wisdom hides her skill.

Tell them, I AM, Jehovah said
To Moses: while Earth heard in dread,
And, smitten to the heart,
At once, above, beneath, around,
All Nature, without voice or sound,
Replied, "O Lord, THOU ART."

C. Smart

180

INFANT JOY

"I have no name;
I am but two days old."
— What shall I call thee?
"I happy am;
Joy is my name."
— Sweet joy befall thee!

Pretty joy!
Sweet joy, but two days old;
Sweet joy I call thee:
Thou dost smile:
I sing the while,
Sweet joy befall thee!

W. Blake

181

A CRADLE SONG

Sleep, sleep, beauty bright,
Dreaming in the joys of night;
Sleep, sleep; in thy sleep
Little sorrows sit and weep.

Sweet babe, in thy face
Soft desires I can trace,
Secret joys and secret smiles,
Little pretty infant wiles.

As thy softest limbs I feel,
Smiles as of the morning steal
O'er thy cheek, and o'er thy breast
Where thy little heart doth rest.

Oh the cunning wiles that creep
In thy little heart asleep!
When thy little heart doth wake,
Then the dreadful light shall break.

W. Blake

182

ODE ON THE SPRING

Lo! where the rosy-bosom'd Hours,
Fair Venus' train, appear,
Disclose the long-expecting flowers
And wake the purple year!
The Attic warbler pours her throat
Responsive to the cuckoo's note,
The untaught harmony of Spring:
While, whispering pleasure as they fly,
Cool Zephyrs thro' the clear blue sky
Their gather'd fragrance fling.

Where'er the oak's thick branches stretch
A broader, browner shade,
Where'er the rude and moss-grown beech
O'er-canopies the glade,
Beside some water's rushy brink
With me the Muse shall sit, and think
(At ease reclined in rustic state)
How vain the ardor of the crowd,
How low, how little are the proud,
How indigent the great!

Still is the toiling hand of Care;
The panting herds repose:
Yet hark, how thro' the peopled air
The busy murmur glows!
The insect-youth are on the wing,
Eager to taste the honeyed spring
And float amid the liquid noon:
Some lightly o'er the current skim,
Some show their gayly-gilded trim
Quick-glancing to the sun.

To Contemplation's sober eye
Such is the race of Man:
And they that creep, and they that fly,
Shall end where they began.

Alike the Busy and the Gay
But flutter thro' life's little day,
In Fortune's varying colors drest:
Brush'd by the hand of rough Mischance,
Or chill'd by Age, their airy dance
They leave, in dust to rest.

Methinks I hear in accents low
The sportive kind reply:
Poor moralist! and what art thou?
A solitary fly!
Thy joys no glittering female meets,
No hive hast thou of hoarded sweets,
No painted plumage to display:
On hasty wings thy youth is flown;
Thy sun is set, thy spring is gone —
We frolic while 'tis May.

T. Gray

183

THE POPLAR FIELD

The poplars are fell'd; farewell to the shade
And the whispering sound of the cool colonnade;
The winds play no longer and sing in the leaves,
Nor Ouse on his bosom their image receives.

Twelve years have elapsed since I first took a view
Of my favorite field, and the bank where they grew:
And now in the grass behold they are laid,
And the tree is my seat that once lent me a shade!

The blackbird has fled to another retreat
Where the hazels afford him a screen from the heat;
And the scene where his melody charm'd me before
Resounds with his sweet-flowing ditty no more.

My fugitive years are all hasting away,
And I must erelong lie as lowly as they,
With a turf on my breast and a stone at my head,
Ere another such grove shall arise in its stead.

The change both my heart and my fancy employs;
I reflect on the frailty of man and his joys:
Short-lived as we are, yet our pleasures, we see,
Have a still shorter date, and die sooner than we.

W. Cowper

184

TO A MOUSE

ON TURNING HER UP IN HER NEST, WITH THE PLOW, NOVEMBER, 1785

Wee, sleekit, cow'rin', tim'rous beastie,
O what a panic's in thy breastie!
Thou need na start awa sae hasty,
Wi' bickering brattle!
I wad be laith to rin an' chase thee
Wi' murd'ring pattle!

I'm truly sorry man's dominion
Has broken Nature's social union,
An' justifies that ill opinion
Which makes thee startle
At me, thy poor earthborn companion,
An' fellow mortal!

I doubt na, whiles, but thou may thieve;
What then? poor beastie, thou maun live!
A daimen-icker in a thrave
'S a sma' request:
I'll get a blessin' wi' the lave,
And never miss't!

Thy wee bit housie, too, in ruin!
Its silly wa's the win's are strewin:
And naething, now, to big a new ane,
O' foggage green!
An' bleak December's winds ensuin'
Baith snell an' keen!

Thou saw the fields laid bare an' waste
An' weary winter comin' fast,

An' cozie here, beneath the blast,
Thou thought to dwell,
Till, crash! the cruel colter past
Out thro' thy cell.

That wee bit heap o' leaves an' stibble
Has cost thee mony a weary nibble!
Now thou's turn'd out, for a' thy trouble,
But house or hald,
To thole the winter's sleety dribble
An' cranreuch cauld!

But, Mousie, thou art no thy lane
In proving foresight may be vain:
The best laid schemes o' mice an' men
Gang aft a-gley,
An' lea'e us naught but grief an' pain,
For promised joy.

Still thou art blest, compared wi' me!
The present only toucheth thee:
But, Och! I backward cast my e'e
On prospects drear!
An' forward, tho' I canna see,
I guess an' fear!

R. Burns

185
A WISH

Mine be a cot beside the hill;
A bee-hive's hum shall soothe my ear;
A willowy brook that turns a mill,
With many a fall shall linger near.

The swallow, oft, beneath my thatch
Shall twitter from her clay-built nest;
Oft shall the pilgrim lift the latch,
And share my meal, a welcome guest.

Around my ivied porch shall spring
Each fragrant flower that drinks the dew;
And Lucy, at her wheel, shall sing
In russet gown and apron blue.

The village church among the trees,
Where first our marriage vows were given,
With merry peals shall swell the breeze
And point with taper spire to Heaven.

S. Rogers

186

ODE TO EVENING

If aught of oaten stop or pastoral song
May hope, O pensive Eve, to soothe thine ear
Like thy own solemn springs,
Thy springs, and dying gales;

O Nymph reserved, — while now the bright-hair'd sun
Sits in yon western tent, whose cloudy skirts,
With brede ethereal wove,
O'erhang his wavy bed;

Now air is hush'd, save where the weak-eyed bat
With short shrill shriek flits by on leathern wing,
Or where the beetle winds
His small but sullen horn,

As oft he rises midst the twilight path,
Against the pilgrim borne in heedless hum, —
Now teach me, maid composed,
To breathe some soften'd strain

Whose numbers, stealing through thy darkening vale,
May not unseemly with its stillness suit;
As, musing slow, I hail
Thy genial loved return.

For when thy folding-star arising shows
His paly circlet, at his warning lamp

The fragrant Hours, and Elves
Who slept in buds the day,

And many a Nymph who wreathes her brows with sedge
And sheds the freshening dew, and, lovelier still,
The pensive Pleasures sweet,
Prepare thy shadowy car.

Then let me rove some wild and heathy scene;
Or find some ruin midst its dreary dells,
Whose walls more awful nod
By thy religious gleams.

Or, if chill blustering winds or driving rain
Prevent my willing feet, be mine the hut
That, from the mountain's side,
Views wilds, and swelling floods,

And hamlets brown, and dim-discover'd spires;
And hears their simple bell; and marks o'er all
Thy dewy fingers draw
The gradual dusky veil.

While Spring shall pour his showers, as oft he wont,
And bathe thy breathing tresses, meekest Eve!
While Summer loves to sport
Beneath thy lingering light;

While sallow Autumn fills thy lap with leaves;
Or Winter, yelling through the troublous air,
Affrights thy shrinking train
And rudely rends thy robes;

So long, regardful of thy quiet rule,
Shall Fancy, Friendship, Science, smiling Peace,
Thy gentlest influence own,
And love thy favorite name!

W. Collins

187

ELEGY WRITTEN IN A COUNTRY CHURCHYARD

The curfew tolls the knell of parting day,
The lowing herd wind slowly o'er the lea,
The plowman homeward plods his weary way,
And leaves the world to darkness and to me.

Now fades the glimmering landscape on the sight,
And all the air a solemn stillness holds,
Save where the beetle wheels his droning flight,
And drowsy tinklings lull the distant folds:

Save that from yonder ivy-mantled tower
The moping owl does to the moon complain
Of such as, wandering near her secret bower,
Molest her ancient solitary reign.

Beneath those rugged elms, that yew-tree's shade
Where heaves the turf in many a moldering heap,
Each in his narrow cell forever laid,
The rude forefathers of the hamlet sleep.

The breezy call of incense-breathing morn,
The swallow twittering from the straw-built shed,
The cock's shrill clarion, or the echoing horn,
No more shall rouse them from their lowly bed.

For them no more the blazing hearth shall burn
Or busy housewife ply her evening care:
No children run to lisp their sire's return,
Or climb his knees the envied kiss to share.

Oft did the harvest to their sickle yield,
Their furrow oft the stubborn glebe has broke;
How jocund did they drive their team afield!
How bow'd the woods beneath their sturdy stroke!

Let not ambition mock their useful toil,
Their homely joys, and destiny obscure;

Nor grandeur hear with a disdainful smile
The short and simple annals of the poor.

The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power,
And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave,
Awaits alike th' inevitable hour: —
The paths of glory lead but to the grave.

Nor you, ye proud, impute to these the fault
If memory o'er their tomb no trophies raise,
Where through the long-drawn aisle and fretted vault
The pealing anthem swells the note of praise.

Can storied urn or animated bust
Back to its mansion call the fleeting breath?
Can honor's voice provoke the silent dust,
Or flattery soothe the dull cold ear of death?

Perhaps in this neglected spot is laid
Some heart once pregnant with celestial fire;
Hands, that the rod of empire might have sway'd,
Or waked to ecstasy the living lyre:

But knowledge to their eyes her ample page,
Rich with the spoils of time, did ne'er unroll;
Chill penury repress'd their noble rage,
And froze the genial current of the soul.

Full many a gem of purest ray serene
The dark unfathom'd caves of ocean bear:
Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its sweetness on the desert air.

Some village Hampden, that with dauntless breast
The little tyrant of his fields withstood,
Some mute inglorious Milton here may rest,
Some Cromwell, guiltless of his country's blood.

Th' applause of listening senates to command,
The threats of pain and ruin to despise,

To scatter plenty o'er a smiling land,
And read their history in a nation's eyes

Their lot forbade: nor circumscribed alone
Their growing virtues, but their crimes confined;
Forbade to wade thro' slaughter to a throne,
And shut the gates of mercy on mankind;

The struggling pangs of conscious truth to hide,
To quench the blushes of ingenuous shame,
Or heap the shrine of luxury and pride
With incense kindled at the Muse's flame.

Far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife
Their sober wishes never learn'd to stray;
Along the cool sequester'd vale of life
They kept the noiseless tenor of their way.

Yet e'en these bones from insult to protect
Some frail memorial still erected nigh,
With uncouth rhymes and shapeless sculpture deck'd,
Implores the passing tribute of a sigh.

Their name, their years, spelled by th' unletter'd Muse,
The place of fame and elegy supply:
And many a holy text around she strews,
That teach the rustic moralist to die.

For who, to dumb forgetfulness a prey,
This pleasing anxious being e'er resign'd,
Left the warm precincts of the cheerful day,
Nor cast one longing lingering look behind?

On some fond breast the parting soul relies,
Some pious drops the closing eye requires;
E'en from the tomb the voice of nature cries,
E'en in our ashes live their wonted fires.

For thee, who, mindful of th' unhonor'd dead,
Dost in these lines their artless tale relate;

If chance, by lonely contemplation led,
Some kindred spirit shall inquire thy fate,

Haply some hoary-headed swain may say,
"Oft have we seen him at the peep of dawn
Brushing with hasty steps the dews away,
To meet the sun upon the upland lawn;

"There at the foot of yonder nodding beech
That wreathes its old fantastic roots so high,
His listless length at noontide would he stretch,
And pore upon the brook that babbles by.

"Hard by yon wood, now smiling as in scorn,
Muttering his wayward fancies he would rove;
Now drooping, woeful-wan, like one forlorn,
Or crazed with care, or cross'd in hopeless love.

"One morn I miss'd him on the custom'd hill,
Along the heath, and near his favorite tree;
Another came; nor yet beside the rill,
Nor up the lawn, nor at the wood was he;

"The next with dirges due in sad array
Slow through the church-way path we saw him borne,—
Approach and read (for thou canst read) the lay Graved on the stone beneath yon aged thorn."

THE EPITAPH

Here rests his head upon the lap of earth
A youth, to fortune and to fame unknown;
Fair science frown'd not on his humble birth
And melancholy mark'd him for her own.

Large was his bounty, and his soul sincere,
Heaven did a recompense as largely send:
He gave to misery (all he had) a tear,
He gain'd from Heaven ('twas all he wish'd) a friend.

No farther seek his merits to disclose,
Or draw his frailties from their dread abode
(There they alike in trembling hope repose),
The bosom of his Father and his God.

T. Gray

188

MARY MORISON

O Mary, at thy window be,
It is the wish'd, the trysted hour!
Those smiles and glances let me see
That make the miser's treasure poor:
How blithely wad I bide the stoure,
A weary slave frae sun to sun,
Could I the rich reward secure,
The lovely Mary Morison.

Yestreen when to the trembling string
The dance gaed thro' the lighted ha',
To thee my fancy took its wing, —
I sat, but neither heard nor saw:
Tho' this was fair, and that was braw,
And yon the toast of a' the town,
I sigh'd, and said amang them a',
"Ye are na Mary Morison."

O Mary, canst thou wreck his peace
Wha for thy sake wad gladly dee?
Or canst thou break that heart of his,
Whase only faut is loving thee?
If love for love thou wilt na gie,
At least be pity to me shown;
A thought ungentle canna be
The thought o' Mary Morison.

R. Burns

189

BONNIE LESLEY

O saw ye bonnie Lesley
As she gaed o'er the border?

She's gane, like Alexander,
To spread her conquests farther.

To see her is to love her,
And love but her forever;
For Nature made her what she is,
And ne'er made sic anither!

Thou art a queen, Fair Lesley,
Thy subjects we, before thee;
Thou art divine, Fair Lesley,
The hearts o' men adore thee.

The Deil he could na scaith thee,
Or aught that wad belang thee;
He'd look into thy bonnie face,
And say "I canna wrang thee!"

The Powers aboon will tent thee;
Misfortune sha' na steer thee;
Thou'rt like themselves sae lovely
That ill they'll ne'er let near thee.

Return again, Fair Lesley,
Return to Caledonie!
That we may brag we hae a lass
There's nane again sae bonnie.

R. Burns

190

O my Luve's like a red, red rose
That's newly sprung in June:
O my Luve's like the melodie
That's sweetly play'd in tune.

As fair art thou, my bonnie lass,
So deep in luve am I:
And I will luve thee still, my dear,
Till a' the seas gang dry:

Till a' the seas gang dry, my dear,
And the rocks melt wi' the sun;
I will luve thee still, my dear,
While the sands o' life shall run.

And fare thee weel, my only Luve!
And fare thee weel awhile;
And I will come again, my Luve,
Tho' it were ten thousand mile.

R. Burns

191

HIGHLAND MARY

Ye banks and braes and streams around
The castle o' Montgomery,
Green be your woods, and fair your flowers,
Your waters never drumlie!
There simmer first unfauld her robes,
And there the langest tarry;
For there I took the last fareweel
O' my sweet Highland Mary.

How sweetly bloom'd the gay green birk,
How rich the hawthorn's blossom,
As underneath their fragrant shade
I clasp'd her to my bosom!
The golden hours on angel wings
Flew o'er me and my dearie;
For dear to me as light and life
Was my sweet Highland Mary.

Wi' mony a vow and lock'd embrace
Our parting was fu' tender;
And pledging aft to meet again,
We tore oursels asunder;
But, Oh! fell Death's untimely frost,
That nipt my flower sae early!
Now green's the sod, and cauld's the clay,
That wraps my Highland Mary!

O pale, pale now, those rosy lips,
I aft hae kiss'd sae fondly:
And closed for aye the sparkling glance
That dwelt on me sae kindly;
And moldering now in silent dust
That heart that lo'ed me dearly!
But still within my bosom's core
Shall live my Highland Mary.

R. Burns

192

AULD ROBIN GRAY

When the sheep are in the fauld, and the kye at hame,
And a' the world to rest are gane,
The waes o' my heart fa' in showers frae my e'e,
While my gudeman lies sound by me.

Young Jamie lo'ed me weel, and sought me for his bride;
But saving a croun he had naething else beside:
To make the croun a pund, young Jamie gaed to sea;
And the croun and the pund were baith for me.

He hadna been awa' a week but only twa,
When my father brak his arm, and the cow was stown awa;
My mother she fell sick, and my Jamie at the sea —
And auld Robin Gray came a-courtin' me.

My father couldna work, and my mother couldna spin;
I toil'd day and night, but their bread I couldna win;
Auld Rob maintain'd them baith, and wi' tears in his e'e
Said, Jennie, for their sakes, O, marry me!

My heart it said nay; I look'd for Jamie back;
But the wind it blew high, and the ship it was a wrack;
His ship it was a wrack — why didna Jamie dee?
Or why do I live to cry, Wae's me?

My father urgit sair: my mother didna speak;
But she look'd in my face till my heart was like to break;

They gi'ed him my hand, but my heart was at the sea;
Sae auld Robin Gray he was gudeman to me.

I hadna been a wife a week but only four,
When mournfu' as I sat on the stane at the door,
I saw my Jamie's wraith, for I couldna think it he
Till he said, I'm come hame to marry thee.

O sair, sair did we greet, and muckle did we say;
We took but ae kiss, and I bad him gang away;
I wish that I were dead, but I'm no like to dee;
And why was I born to say, Wae's me?

I gang like a ghaist, and I carena to spin;
I daurna think on Jamie, for that wad be a sin;
But I'll do my best a gude wife aye to be,
For auld Robin Gray he is kind unto me.

Lady A. Lindsay

193
DUNCAN GRAY

Duncan Gray cam here to woo,
Ha, ha, the wooing o't;
On blithe Yule night when we were fou,
Ha, ha, the wooing o't:

Maggie coost her head fu' high,
Look'sasklent and unco skeigh,
Gart poor Duncan stand abeigh;
Ha, ha, the wooing o't!

Duncan fleech'd, and Duncan pray'd;
Meg was deaf as Ailsa Craig;
Duncan sigh'd baith out and in,
Grat his een baith bleer't and blin',
Spak o' lowpin ower a linn!

Time and chance are but a tide,
Slighted love is sair to bide;

Shall I, like a fool, quoth he,
For a haughty hizzie dee?
She may gae to — France for me!

How it comes let doctors tell,
Meg grew sick — as he grew well;
Something in her bosom wrings,
For relief a sigh she brings!
And O, her een, they spak sic things!

Duncan was a lad o' grace;
Maggie's was a piteous case;
Duncan couldna be her death,
Swelling pity smoor'd his wrath;
Now they're crouse and canty baith:
Ha, ha, the wooing o't!

R. Burns

194
THE SAILOR'S WIFE

And are ye sure the news is true?
And are ye sure he's weel?
Is this the time to think o' wark?
Ye jades, lay by your wheel;
Is this the time to spin a thread,
When Colin's at the door?
Reach down my cloak, I'll to the quay,
And see him come ashore.
For there's nae luck about the house,
There's nae luck at a';
There's little pleasure in the house
When our gudeman's awa'.

And gie to me my bigonet,
My bishop's satin gown;
For I maun tell the baillie's wife
That Colin's in the town.
My Turkey slippers maun gae on,
My stockins pearly blue;

It's a' to pleasure our gudeman,
For he's baith leal and true.

Rise, lass, and mak a clean fireside,
Put on the muckle pot;
Gie little Kate her button gown
And Jock his Sunday coat;
And mak their shoon as black as slaes,
Their hose as white as snaw;
It's a' to please my ain gudeman,
For he's been long awa.

There's twa fat hens upo' the coop
Been fed this month and mair;
Mak haste and thraw their necks about,
That Colin weel may fare;
And spread the table neat and clean,
Gar ilka thing look braw,
For wha can tell how Colin fared
When he was far awa?

Sae true his heart, sae smooth his speech,
His breath like caller air;
His very foot has music in't
As he comes up the stair —
And will I see his face again?
And will I hear him speak?
I'm downright dizzy wi' the thought,
In troth, I'm like to greet!

If Colin's weel, and weel content,
I hae nae mair to crave:
And gin I live to keep him sae,
I'm blest aboon the lave:
And will I see his face again?
And will I hear him speak?
I'm downright dizzy wi' the thought,
In troth I'm like to greet!
For there's nae luck about the house,
There's nae luck at a';

There's little pleasure in the house
When our gudeman's awa'.

W. J. Mickle

195
ABSENCE

When I think on the happy days
I spent wi' you, my dearie;
And now what lands between us lie,
How can I be but eerie!

How slow ye move, ye heavy hours,
As ye were wae and weary!
It was na sae ye glinted by
When I was wi' my dearie.

Anon.

196
JEAN

Of a' the airts the wind can blaw
I dearly like the West,
For there the bonnie lassie lives,
The lassie I lo'e best:
There wild woods grow, and rivers row,
And mony a hill between;
But day and night my fancy's flight
Is ever wi' my Jean.

I see her in the dewy flowers,
I see her sweet and fair:
I hear her in the tunefu' birds,
I hear her charm the air:
There's not a bonnie flower that springs
By fountain, shaw, or green,
There's not a bonnie bird that sings
But minds me o' my Jean.

O blaw ye westlin winds, blaw saft
Amang the leafy trees;

Wi' balmy gale, frae hill and dale
Bring hame the laden bees:
And bring the lassie back to me
That's aye sae neat and clean;
Ae smile o' her wad banish care,
Sae charming is my Jean.

What sighs and vows amang the knowes
Hae pass'd atween us twa!
How fond to meet, how wae to part
That night she gaed awa!
The Powers aboon can only ken
To whom the heart is seen,
That nane can be sae dear to me
As my sweet lovely Jean!

R. Burns

197
JOHN ANDERSON

John Anderson my jo, John,
When we were first acquent
Your locks were like the raven,
Your bonnie brow was brent;
But now your brow is bald, John,
Your locks are like the snow;
But blessings on your frosty pow,
John Anderson my jo.

John Anderson my jo, John,
We clamb the hill thegither,
And mony a canty day, John,
We've had wi' ane anither:
Now we maun totter down, John,
But hand in hand we'll go,
And sleep thegither at the foot,
John Anderson my jo.

R. Burns

198

THE LAND O' THE LEAL

I'm wearing awa', Jean,
Like snaw when its thaw, Jean,
I'm wearing awa'
To the land o' the leal.
There's nae sorrow there, Jean,
There's neither cauld nor care, Jean,
The day is aye fair
In the land o' the leal.

Ye were aye leal and true, Jean,
Your task's ended noo, Jean,
And I'll welcome you
To the land o' the leal.
Our bonnie bairn's there, Jean,
She was baith guid and fair, Jean;
O we grudged her right sair
To the land o' the leal!

Then dry that tearfu' e'e, Jean,
My soul langs to be free, Jean,
And angels wait on me
To the land o' the leal.
Now fare ye weel, my ain Jean,
This warld's care is vain, Jean;
We'll meet and aye be fain
In the land o' the leal!

Lady Nairne

199

ODE ON A DISTANT PROSPECT OF ETON COLLEGE

Ye distant spires, ye antique towers
That crown the watery glade,
Where grateful Science still adores
Her Henry's holy shade;
And ye, that from the stately brow
Of Windsor's heights th' expanse below

Of grove, of lawn, of mead survey,
Whose turf, whose shade, whose flowers among Wanders the hoary Thames along
His silver-winding way:

Ah happy hills! ah pleasing shade!
Ah fields beloved in vain!
Where once my careless childhood stray'd,
A stranger yet to pain!
I feel the gales that from ye blow
A momentary bliss bestow,
As waving fresh their gladsome wing
My weary soul they seem to soothe,
And, redolent of joy and youth,
To breathe a second spring.

Say, Father Thames, for thou hast seen
Full many a sprightly race
Disporting on thy margent green
The paths of pleasure trace;
Who foremost now delight to cleave
With pliant arm, thy glassy wave?
The captive linnet which enthrall?
What idle progeny succeed
To chase the rolling circle's speed
Or urge the flying ball?

While some on earnest business bent
Their murmuring labors ply
'Gainst graver hours that bring constraint
To sweeten liberty:
Some bold adventurers disdain
The limits of their little reign
And unknown regions dare descry:
Still as they run they look behind,
They hear a voice in every wind,
And snatch a fearful joy.

Gay hope is theirs by fancy fed,
Less pleasing when possest;

The tear forgot as soon as shed,
The sunshine of the breast:
Theirs buxom health, of rosy hue,
Wild wit, invention ever new,
And lively cheer, of vigor born;
The thoughtless day, the easy night,
The spirits pure, the slumbers light
That fly th' approach of morn.

Alas! regardless of their doom
The little victims play;
No sense have they of ills to come
Nor care beyond to-day:
Yet see how all around 'em wait
The ministers of human fate
And black Misfortune's baleful train!
Ah show them where in ambush stand
To seize their prey, the murderous band!
Ah, tell them they are men!

These shall the fury Passions tear,
The vultures of the mind,
Disdainful Anger, pallid Fear,
And Shame that skulks behind;
Or pining Love shall waste their youth,
Or Jealousy with rankling tooth
That inly gnaws the secret heart,
And Envy wan, and faded Care,
Grim-visaged comfortless Despair,
And Sorrow's piercing dart.

Ambition this shall tempt to rise,
Then whirl the wretch from high
To bitter Scorn a sacrifice
And grinning Infamy.
The stings of Falsehood those shall try
And hard Unkindness' alter'd eye,
That mocks the tear it forced to flow;
And keen Remorse with blood defiled,
And moody Madness laughing wild
Amid severest woe.

Lo, in the vale of years beneath
A grisly troop are seen,
The painful family of Death,
More hideous than their queen:
This racks the joints, this fires the veins,
That every laboring sinew strains,
Those in the deeper vitals rage:
Lo! Poverty, to fill the band,
That numbs the soul with icy hand,
And slow-consuming Age.

To each his sufferings: all are men,
Condemn'd alike to groan;
The tender for another's pain,
Th' unfeeling for his own.
Yet, ah! why should they know their fate,
Since sorrow never comes too late,
And happiness too swiftly flies?
Thought would destroy their paradise.
No more; — where ignorance is bliss,
'Tis folly to be wise.

T. Gray

200

THE SHRUBBERY

O happy shades! to me unblest!
Friendly to peace, but not to me!
How ill the scene that offers rest,
And heart that cannot rest, agree!

This glassy stream, that spreading pine,
Those alders quivering to the breeze,
Might soothe a soul less hurt than mine,
And please, if anything could please.

But fix'd unalterable Care
Foregoes not what she feels within,
Shows the same sadness everywhere,
And slights the season and the scene.

For all that pleased in wood or lawn
While Peace possess'd these silent bowers,
Her animating smile withdrawn,
Has lost its beauties and its powers.

The saint or moralist should tread
This moss-grown alley, musing, slow,
They seek like me the secret shade,
But not, like me, to nourish woe!

Me, fruitful scenes and prospects waste
Alike admonish not to roam;
These tell me of enjoyments past,
And those of sorrows yet to come.

W. Cowper

201

HYMN TO ADVERSITY

Daughter of Jove, relentless power,
Thou tamer of the human breast,
Whose iron scourge and torturing hour
The bad affright, afflict the best!
Bound in thy adamantine chain
The proud are taught to taste of pain,
And purple tyrants vainly groan
With pangs unfelt before, unpitied and alone.

When first thy Sire to send on earth
Virtue, his darling child, design'd,
To thee he gave the heavenly birth
And bade to form her infant mind.
Stern, rugged nurse; thy rigid lore
With patience many a year she bore;
What sorrow was, thou bad'st her know,
And from her own she learn'd to melt at others' woe.

Scared at thy frown terrific, fly
Self-pleasing Folly's idle brood,
Wild Laughter, Noise, and thoughtless Joy,
And leave us leisure to be good.

Light they disperse, and with them go
The summer friend, the flattering foe;
By vain Prosperity received,
To her they vow their truth, and are again believed.

Wisdom in sable garb array'd
Immersed in rapturous thought profound,
And Melancholy, silent maid,
With leaden eye, that loves the ground,
Still on thy solemn steps attend:
Warm Charity, the general friend,
With Justice, to herself severe,
And Pity dropping soft the sadly-pleasing tear.

Oh! gently on thy suppliant's head
Dread goddess, lay thy chastening hand!
Not in thy Gorgon terrors clad,
Nor circled with the vengeful band
(As by the impious thou art seen)
With thundering voice, and threatening mien,
With screaming Horror's funeral cry,
Despair, and fell Disease, and ghastly Poverty; --

Thy form benign, oh goddess, wear,
Thy milder influence impart,
Thy philosophic train be there
To soften, not to wound my heart.
The generous spark extinct revive,
Teach me to love and to forgive,
Exact my own defects to scan,
What others are to feel, and know myself a Man.

T. Gray

202

THE SOLITUDE OF ALEXANDER SELKIRK

I am monarch of all I survey;
My right there is none to dispute;
From the center all round to the sea
I am lord of the fowl and the brute.

O Solitude! where are the charms
That sages have seen in thy face?
Better dwell in the midst of alarms,
Than reign in this horrible place.

I am out of humanity's reach,
I must finish my journey alone,
Never hear the sweet music of speech;
I start at the sound of my own.
The beasts that roam over the plain
My form with indifference see;
They are so unacquainted with man,
Their tameness is shocking to me.

Society, Friendship, and Love
Divinely bestow'd upon man,
Oh, had I the wings of a dove
How soon would I taste you again!
My sorrows I then might assuage
In the ways of religion and truth,
Might learn from the wisdom of age,
And be cheer'd by the sallies of youth.

Ye winds that have made me your sport,
Convey to this desolate shore
Some cordial endearing report
Of a land I shall visit no more:
My friends, do they now and then send
A wish or a thought after me?
O tell me I yet have a friend,
Though a friend I am never to see.

How fleet is a glance of the mind!
Compared with the speed of its flight,
The tempest itself lags behind,
And the swift-wingéd arrows of light.
When I think of my own native land
In a moment I seem to be there;
But alas! recollection at hand
Soon hurries me back to despair.

But the sea-fowl is gone to her nest,
The beast is laid down in his lair;
Even here is a season of rest,
And I to my cabin repair.
There's mercy in every place,
And mercy, encouraging thought!
Gives even affliction a grace
And reconciles man to his lot.

W. Cowper

203
TO MARY UNWIN

Mary! I want a lyre with other strings,
Such aid from Heaven as some have feign'd they drew,
An eloquence scarce given to mortals, new
And undebased by praise of meaner things,

That ere through age or woe I shed my wings
I may record thy worth with honor due,
In verse as musical as thou art true,
And that immortalizes whom it sings: —

But thou hast little need. There is a Book
By seraphs writ with beams of heavenly light,
On which the eyes of God not rarely look,

A chronicle of actions just and bright —
There all thy deeds, my faithful Mary, shine;
And since thou own'st that praise, I spare thee mine.

W. Cowper

204
TO THE SAME

The twentieth year is well-nigh past
Since first our sky was overcast;
Ah would that this might be the last!
My Mary!

Thy spirits have a fainter flow,
I see thee daily weaker grow —
'Twas my distress that brought thee low,
My Mary!

Thy needles, once a shining store,
For my sake restless heretofore,
Now rust disused, and shine no more;
My Mary!

For though thou gladly wouldst fulfill
The same kind office for me still,
Thy sight now seconds not thy will,
My Mary!

But well thou play'st the housewife's part,
And all thy threads with magic art
Have wound themselves about this heart,
My Mary!

Thy indistinct expressions seem
Like language utter'd in a dream;
Yet me they charm, whate'er the theme,
My Mary!

Thy silver locks, once auburn bright,
Are still more lovely in my sight
Than golden beams of orient light,
My Mary!

For could I view nor them nor thee,
What sight worth seeing could I see?
The sun would rise in vain for me,
My Mary!

Partakers of thy sad decline
Thy hands their little force resign;
Yet, gently pressed, press gently mine,
My Mary!

Such feebleness of limbs thou prov'st
That now at every step thou mov'st
Upheld by two; yet still thou lov'st,
My Mary!

And still to love, though pressed with ill,
In wintry age to feel no chill,
With me is to be lovely still,
My Mary!

But ah! by constant heed I know
How oft the sadness that I show
Transforms thy smiles to looks of woe,
My Mary!

And should my future lot be cast
With much resemblance of the past,
Thy worn-out heart will break at last —
My Mary!

W. Cowper

205
THE CASTAWAY

Obscurest night involved the sky,
The Atlantic billows roar'd,
When such a destined wretch as I,
Wash'd headlong from on board,
Of friends, of hope, of all bereft,
His floating home forever left.

No braver chief could Albion boast
Than he with whom he went,
Nor ever ship left Albion's coast
With warmer wishes sent.
He loved them both, but both in vain,
Nor him beheld, nor her again.

Not long beneath the whelming brine,
Expert to swim, he lay;

Nor soon he felt his strength decline,
Or courage die away;
But waged with death a lasting strife,
Supported by despair of life.

He shouted: nor his friends had fail'd
To check the vessel's course,
But so the furious blast prevail'd,
That, pitiless perforce,
They left their outcast mate behind,
And scudded still before the wind.

Some succor yet they could afford;
And such as storms allow,
The cask, the coop, the floated cord,
Delay'd not to bestow.
But he (they knew) nor ship nor shore,
Whate'er they gave, should visit more.

Nor, cruel as it seem'd, could he
Their haste himself condemn,
Aware that flight, in such a sea,
Alone could rescue them;
Yet bitter felt it still to die
Deserted, and his friends so nigh.

He long survives, who lives an hour
In ocean, self-upheld;
And so long he, with unspent power,
His destiny repell'd;
And ever, as the minutes flew,
Entreated help, or cried "Adieu!"

At length, his transient respite past,
His comrades, who before
Had heard his voice in every blast,
Could catch the sound no more;
For then, by toil subdued, he drank
The stifling wave, and then he sank.

No poet wept him; but the page
  Of narrative sincere,
That tells his name, his worth, his age,
  Is wet with Anson's tear:
And tears by bards or heroes shed
Alike immortalize the dead.

I therefore purpose not, or dream,
  Descanting on his fate,
To give the melancholy theme
  A more enduring date:
But misery still delights to trace
Its semblance in another's case.

No voice divine the storm allay'd,
  No light propitious shone,
When, snatch'd from all effectual aid,
  We perish'd, each alone:
But I beneath a rougher sea,
And whelm'd in deeper gulfs than he.

W. Cowper

206

TO–MORROW

In the downhill of life, when I find I'm declining,
  May my fate no less fortunate be
Than a snug elbow chair will afford for reclining,
  And a cot that o'erlooks the wide sea;
With an ambling pad-pony to pace o'er the lawn,
  While I carol away idle sorrow,
And blithe as the lark that each day hails the dawn
  Look forward with hope for To-morrow.

With a porch at my door, both for shelter and shade too,
  As the sunshine or rain may prevail;
And a small spot of ground for the use of the spade too,
  With a barn for the use of the flail:
A cow for my dairy, a dog for my game,
  And a purse when a friend wants to borrow;

I'll envy no Nabob his riches or fame,
Or what honors may wait him To-morrow.

From the bleak northern blast may my cot be completely
Secured by a neighboring hill;
And at night may repose steal upon me more sweetly
By the sound of a murmuring rill:
And while peace and plenty I find at my board,
With a heart free from sickness and sorrow,
With my friends may I share what To-day may afford,
And let them spread the table To-morrow.

And when I at last must throw off this frail cov'ring
Which I've worn for threescore years and ten,
On the brink of the grave I'll not seek to keep hov'ring,
Nor my thread wish to spin o'er again:
But my face in the glass I'll serenely survey,
And with smiles count each wrinkle and furrow;
As this old worn-out stuff, which is threadbare To-day,
May become Everlasting To-morrow.

J. Collins

207

Life! I know not what thou art,
But know that thou and I must part;
And when, or how, or where we met
I own to me's a secret yet.

Life! we've been long together
Through pleasant and through cloudy weather;
'Tis hard to part when friends are dear —
Perhaps 'twill cost a sigh, a tear;
— Then steal away, give little warning,
Choose thine own time;
Say not Good Night, — but in some brighter clime
Bid me Good Morning.

A. L. Barbauld

BOOK FOURTH

208

TO THE MUSES

Whether on Ida's shady brow,
  Or in the chambers of the East,
The chambers of the sun, that now
  From ancient melody have ceased;

Whether in Heaven ye wander fair.
  Or the green corners of the earth,
Or the blue regions of the air,
  Where the melodious winds have birth;

Whether on crystal rocks ye rove
  Beneath the bosom of the sea,
Wandering in many a coral grove, —
  Fair Nine, forsaking Poetry;

How have you left the ancient love
  That bards of old enjoy'd in you!
The languid strings do scarcely move,
  The sound is forced, the notes are few.

W. Blake

209

ODE ON THE POETS

Bards of Passion and of Mirth,
Ye have left your souls on earth!
Have ye souls in heaven too,
Double-lived in regions new?

— Yes, and those of heaven commune
With the spheres of sun and moon;
With the noise of fountains wond'rous
And the parle of voices thund'rous;
With the whisper of heaven's trees
And one another, in soft ease
Seated on Elysian lawns
Browsed by none but Dian's fawns;
Underneath large bluebells tented,
Where the daisies are rose-scented,
And the rose herself has got Perfume which on earth is not;
Where the nightingale doth sing
Not a senseless, trancéd thing,
But divine melodious truth;
Philosophic numbers smooth;
Tales and golden histories
Of heaven and its mysteries.

Thus ye live on high, and then
On the earth ye live again;
And the souls ye left behind you
Teach us, here, the way to find you,
Where your other souls are joying,
Never slumber'd, never cloying.
Here, your earthborn souls still speak
To mortals, of their little week;
Of their sorrows and delights;
Of their passions and their spites;
Of their glory and their shame;
What doth strengthen and what maim: —
Thus ye teach us, every day,
Wisdom, though fled far away.

Bards of Passion and of Mirth
Ye have left your souls on earth!
Ye have souls in heaven too,
Double-lived in regions new!

J. Keats

210

ON FIRST LOOKING INTO CHAPMAN'S HOMER

Much have I travel'd in the realms of gold
And many goodly states and kingdoms seen:
Round many western islands have I been
Which bards in fealty to Apollo hold.

Oft of one wide expanse had I been told
That deep-brow'd Homer ruled as his demesne:
Yet did I never breathe its pure serene
Till I heard Chapman speak out loud and bold:

— Then felt I like some watcher of the skies
When a new planet swims into his ken,
Or like stout Cortez, when with eagle eyes

He stared at the Pacific — and all his men
Look'd at each other with a wild surmise —
Silent, upon a peak in Darien.

J. Keats

211

LOVE

All thoughts, all passions, all delights,
Whatever stirs this mortal frame,
All are but ministers of Love,
And feed his sacred flame.

Oft in my waking dreams do I
Live o'er again that happy hour,
When midway on the mount I lay,
Beside the ruin'd tower.

The moonshine stealing o'er the scene
Had blended with the lights of eve;
And she was there, my hope, my joy,
My own dear Genevieve!

She lean'd against the armèd man,
The statue of the armèd knight,
She stood and listen'd to my lay,
Amid the lingering light.

Few sorrows hath she of her own,
My hope! my joy! my Genevieve!
She loves me best, whene'er I sing
The songs that make her grieve.

I play'd a soft and doleful air,
I sang an old and moving story —
An old rude song, that suited well
That ruin wild and hoary.

She listen'd with a flitting blush,
With downcast eyes and modest grace;
For well she knew, I could not choose
But gaze upon her face.

I told her of the Knight that wore
Upon his shield a burning brand;
And that for ten long years he woo'd
The Lady of the Land.

I told her how he pined: and ah!
The deep, the low, the pleading tone
With which I sang another's love
Interpreted my own.

She listen'd with a flitting blush,
With downcast eyes, and modest grace,
And she forgave me, that I gazed
Too fondly on her face!

But when I told the cruel scorn
That crazed that bold and lovely Knight,
And that he cross'd the mountain woods,
Nor rested day nor night;

That sometimes from the savage den,
And sometimes from the darksome shade,
And sometimes starting up at once
In green and sunny glade, —

There came and look'd him in the face
An angel beautiful and bright;
And that he knew it was a Fiend,
This miserable Knight!

And that unknowing what he did,
He leap'd amid a murderous band,
And saved from outrage worse than death
The Lady of the Land; —

And how she wept, and clasp'd his knees,
And how she tended him in vain —
And ever strove to expiate
The scorn that crazed his brain; —

And that she nursed him in a cave,
And how his madness went away,
When on the yellow forest leaves
A dying man he lay; —

His dying words — but when I reach'd
That tenderest strain of all the ditty,
My faltering voice and pausing harp
Disturb'd her soul with pity!

All impulses of soul and sense
Had thrill'd my guileless Genevieve;
The music and the doleful tale,
The rich and balmy eve;

And hopes, and fears that kindle hope,
An undistinguishable throng,
And gentle wishes long subdued,
Subdued and cherish'd long!

She wept with pity and delight,
She blush'd with love, and virgin shame;
And like the murmur of a dream,
I heard her breathe my name.

Her bosom heaved — she stepp'd aside,
As conscious of my look she stept —
Then suddenly, with timorous eye
She fled to me and wept.

She half inclosed me with her arms,
She press'd me with a meek embrace;
And bending back her head, look'd up,
And gazed upon my face.

'Twas partly love, and partly fear,
And partly 'twas a bashful art
That I might rather feel, than see,
The swelling of her heart.

I calm'd her fears, and she was calm,
And told her love with virgin pride;
And so I won my Genevieve,
My bright and beauteous Bride.

S. T. Coleridge

212

ALL FOR LOVE

O talk not to me of a name great in story;
The days of our youth are the days of our glory;
And the myrtle and ivy of sweet two-and-twenty
Are worth all your laurels, though ever so plenty.

What are garlands and crowns to the brow that is wrinkled?
'Tis but as a dead flower with May-dew besprinkled:
Then away with all such from the head that is hoary —
What care I for the wreaths that can only give glory?

O fame! — if I e'er took delight in thy praises,
'Twas less for the sake of thy high-sounding phrases,

Than to see the bright eyes of the dear one discover
She thought that I was not unworthy to love her.

There chiefly I sought thee, there only I found thee;
Her glance was the best of the rays that surround thee;
When it sparkled o'er aught that was bright in my story,
I knew it was love, and I felt it was glory.

Lord Byron

213

THE OUTLAW

O Brignall banks are wild and fair,
  And Greta woods are green,
And you may gather garlands there
  Would grace a summer queen.
And as I rode by Dalton-Hall
  Beneath the turrets high,
A Maiden on the castle wall
  Was singing merrily:
"O Brignall banks are fresh and fair,
  And Greta woods are green;
I'd rather rove with Edmund there
  Than reign our English queen."

"If, Maiden, thou wouldst wend with me,
  To leave both tower and town,
Thou first must guess what life lead we
  That dwell by dale and down.
And if thou canst that riddle read,
  As read full well you may,
Then to the greenwood shalt thou speed
  As blithe as Queen of May."
Yet sung she, "Brignall banks are fair,
  And Greta woods are green;
I'd rather rove with Edmund there
  Than reign our English queen.

"I read you, by your bugle horn
  And by your palfrey good,

I read you for a ranger sworn
To keep the king's greenwood."
"A Ranger, lady, winds his horn,
And 'tis at peep of light;
His blast is heard at merry morn,
And mine at dead of night."
Yet sung she, "Brignall banks are fair,
And Greta woods are gay;
I would I were with Edmund there
To reign his Queen of May!

"With burnish'd brand and musketoon
So gallantly you come,
I read you for a bold Dragoon
That lists the tuck of drum."
"I list no more the tuck of drum,
No more the trumpet hear;
But when the beetle sounds his hum
My comrades take the spear.
And O! though Brignall banks be fair
And Greta woods be gay,
Yet mickle must the maiden dare
Would reign my Queen of May!

"Maiden! a nameless life I lead,
A nameless death I'll die;
The fiend whose lantern lights the mead
Were better mate than I!
And when I'm with my comrades met
Beneath the greenwood bough, —
What once we were we all forget,
Nor think what we are now."

CHORUS

"Yet Brignall banks are fresh and fair,
And Greta woods are green,
And you may gather garlands there
Would grace a summer queen."

Sir W. Scott

214

There be none of Beauty's daughters
With a magic like Thee;
And like music on the waters
Is thy sweet voice to me:
When, as if its sound were causing
The charmed ocean's pausing,
The waves lie still and gleaming,
And the lull'd winds seem dreaming:

And the midnight moon is weaving
Her bright chain o'er the deep,
Whose breast is gently heaving
As an infant's asleep:
So the spirit bows before thee
To listen and adore thee;
With a full but soft emotion,
Like the swell of Summer's ocean.

Lord Byron

215

THE INDIAN SERENADE

I arise from dreams of Thee
In the first sweet sleep of night,
When the winds are breathing low
And the stars are shining bright:
I arise from dreams of thee,
And a spirit in my feet
Hath led me — who knows how?
To thy chamber window, Sweet!

The wandering airs they faint
On the dark, the silent stream —
The champak odors fail
Like sweet thoughts in a dream;
The nightingale's complaint
It dies upon her heart,
As I must die on thine,
O belovéd as thou art!

Oh lift me from the grass!
I die, I faint, I fail!
Let thy Love in kisses rain
On my lips and eyelids pale.
My cheek is cold and white, alas!
My heart beats loud and fast;
Oh! press it close to thine again
Where it will break at last.

P. B. Shelley

216

She walks in beauty, like the night
Of cloudless climes and starry skies,
And all that's best of dark and bright
Meet in her aspect and her eyes;
Thus mellow'd to that tender light
Which heaven to gaudy day denies.

One shade the more, one ray the less,
Had half impair'd the nameless grace
Which waves in every raven tress
Or softly lightens o'er her face,
Where thoughts serenely sweet express
How pure, how dear their dwelling place.

And on that cheek and o'er that brow
So soft, so calm, yet eloquent,
The smiles that win, the tints that glow
But tell of days in goodness spent, —
A mind at peace with all below,
A heart whose love is innocent.

Lord Byron

217

She was a Phantom of delight
When first she gleam'd upon my sight;
A lovely Apparition, sent
To be a moment's ornament;
Her eyes as stars of twilight fair;

Like Twilight's, too, her dusky hair;
But all things else about her drawn
From May-time and the cheerful dawn;
A dancing shape, an image gay,
To haunt, to startle, and waylay.

I saw her upon nearer view,
A Spirit, yet a Woman too!
Her household motions light and free,
And steps of virgin-liberty;
A countenance in which did meet
Sweet records, promises as sweet;
A creature not too bright or good
For human nature's daily food,
For transient sorrows, simple wiles,
Praise, blame, love, kisses, tears, and smiles.

And now I see with eye serene
The very pulse of the machine;
A being breathing thoughtful breath,
A traveler between life and death:
The reason firm, the temperate will,
Endurance, foresight, strength, and skill;
A perfect Woman, nobly plann'd
To warn, to comfort, and command;
And yet a Spirit still, and bright
With something of an angel light.

W. Wordsworth

218

She is not fair to outward view
  As many maidens be;
Her loveliness I never knew
  Until she smiled on me.
O then I saw her eye was bright,
A well of love, a spring of light.

But now her looks are coy and cold,
  To mine they ne'er reply,

And yet I cease not to behold
The love-light in her eye:
Her very frowns are fairer far
Than smiles of other maidens are.

H. Coleridge

219

I fear thy kisses, gentle maiden;
Thou needest not fear mine;
My spirit is too deeply laden
Ever to burthen thine.

I fear thy mien, thy tones, thy motion;
Thou needest not fear mine;
Innocent is the heart's devotion
With which I worship thine.

P. B. Shelley

220

She dwelt among the untrodden ways
Beside the springs of Dove;
A maid whom there were none to praise,
And very few to love.

A violet by a mossy stone
Half-hidden from the eye!
— Fair as a star, when only one
Is shining in the sky.

She lived unknown, and few could know
When Lucy ceased to be;
But she is in her grave, and, oh,
The difference to me!

W. Wordsworth

221

I travel'd among unknown men
In lands beyond the sea;
Nor, England! did I know till then
What love I bore to thee.

'Tis past, that melancholy dream!
Nor will I quit thy shore
A second time; for still I seem
To love thee more and more.

Among thy mountains did I feel
The joy of my desire;
And she I cherish'd turn'd her wheel
Beside an English fire

Thy mornings show'd, thy nights conceal'd
The bowers where Lucy play'd;
And thine too is the last green field
That Lucy's eyes survey'd.

W. Wordsworth

222

THE EDUCATION OF NATURE

Three years she grew in sun and shower;
Then Nature said, "A lovelier flower
On earth was never sown:
This Child I to myself will take;
She shall be mine, and I will make
A lady of my own.

"Myself will to my darling be
Both law and impulse; and with me
The girl, in rock and plain,
In earth and heaven, in glade and bower,
Shall feel an overseeing power
To kindle or restrain.

"She shall be sportive as the fawn
That wild with glee across the lawn
Or up the mountain springs;
And hers shall be the breathing balm,
And hers the silence and the calm
Of mute insensate things.

"The floating clouds their state shall lend
To her; for her the willow bend;
Nor shall she fail to see
Ev'n in the motions of the storm
Grace that shall mold the maiden's form
By silent sympathy.

"The stars of midnight shall be dear
To her; and she shall lean her ear
In many a secret place
Where rivulets dance their wayward round,
And beauty born of murmuring sound
Shall pass into her face.

"And vital feelings of delight
Shall rear her form to stately height,
Her virgin bosom swell;
Such thoughts to Lucy I will give
While she and I together live
Here in this happy dell."

Thus Nature spake — The work was done —
How soon my Lucy's race was run!
She died, and left to me
This heath, this calm and quiet scene;
The memory of what has been,
And never more will be.

W. Wordsworth

223

A slumber did my spirit seal;
I had no human fears:
She seem'd a thing that could not feel
The touch of earthly years.

No motion has she now, no force;
She neither hears nor sees;
Roll'd round in earth's diurnal course
With rocks, and stones, and trees.

W. Wordsworth

224

A LOST LOVE

I meet thy pensive, moonlight face;
Thy thrilling voice I hear;
And former hours and scenes retrace,
Too fleeting: and too dear!

Then sighs and tears flow fast and free,
Though none is nigh to share;
And life has naught beside for me
So sweet as this despair.

There are crush'd hearts that will not break;
And mine, methinks, is one;
Or thus I should not weep and wake,
And thou to slumber gone.

I little thought it thus could be
In days more sad and fair —
That earth could have a place for me,
And thou no longer there.

Yet death cannot our hearts divide,
Or make thee less my own:
'Twere sweeter sleeping at thy side
Than watching here alone.

Yet never, never can we part,
While Memory holds her reign:
Thine, thine is still this wither'd heart,
Till we shall meet again.

H. F. Lyte

225

LORD ULLIN'S DAUGHTER

A Chieftain to the Highlands bound
Cries "Boatman, do not tarry!
And I'll give thee a silver pound
To row us o'er the ferry!"

"Now who be ye, would cross Lochgyle,
This dark and stormy water?"
"O I'm the chief of Ulva's isle,
And this, Lord Ullin's daughter.

"And fast before her father's men
Three days we've fled together,
For should he find us in the glen,
My blood would stain the heather.

"His horsemen hard behind us ride —
Should they our steps discover,
Then who will cheer my bonny bride,
When they have slain her lover?"

Out spoke the hardy Highland wight,
"I'll go, my chief, I'm ready:
It is not for your silver bright,
But for your winsome lady: —

"And by my word! the bonny bird
In danger shall not tarry;
So though the waves are raging white
I'll row you o'er the ferry."

By this the storm grew loud apace,
The water-wraith was shrieking;
And in the scowl of Heaven each face
Grew dark as they were speaking.

But still as wilder blew the wind,
And as the night grew drearer,
Adown the glen rode armèd men,
Their trampling sounded nearer.

"O haste thee, haste!" the lady cries,
"Though tempests round us gather;
I'll meet the raging of the skies,
But not an angry father."

The boat has left a stormy land,
A stormy sea before her, —
When, oh! too strong for human hand
The tempest gather'd o'er her.

And still they row'd amidst the roar
Of waters fast prevailing:
Lord Ullin reach'd that fatal shore, —
His wrath was changed to wailing.

For, sore dismay'd, through storm and shade
His child he did discover; —
One lovely hand she stretch'd for aid,
And one was round her lover.

"Come back! come back!" he cried in grief
"Across this stormy water:
And I'll forgive your Highland chief,
My daughter! — Oh, my daughter!"

'Twas vain: the loud waves lash'd the shore,
Return or aid preventing:
The waters wild went o'er his child,
And he was left lamenting.

T. Campbell

226

LUCY GRAY

Oft I had heard of Lucy Gray:
And when I cross'd the wild,
I chanced to see at break of day
The solitary child.

No mate, no comrade Lucy knew;
She dwelt on a wide moor,
The sweetest thing that ever grew
Beside a human door!

You yet may spy the fawn at play,
The hare upon the green;

But the sweet face of Lucy Gray
Will never more be seen.

"To-night will be a stormy night —
You to the town must go;
And take a lantern, Child, to light
Your mother through the snow."

"That, Father! will I gladly do:
'Tis scarcely afternoon —
The minster clock has just struck two,
And yonder is the moon!"

At this the father raised his hook,
And snapp'd a fagot band;
He plied his work; — and Lucy took
The lantern in her hand.

Not blither is the mountain roe:
With many a wanton stroke
Her feet disperse the powdery snow,
That rises up like smoke.

The storm came on before its time:
She wander'd up and down;
And many a hill did Lucy climb:
But never reach'd the town.

The wretched parents all that night
Went shouting far and wide;
But there was neither sound nor sight
To serve them for a guide.

At daybreak on a hill they stood
That overlook'd the moor;
And thence they saw the bridge of wood
A furlong from their door.

They wept — and, turning homeward, cried
"In heaven we all shall meet!"

— When in the snow the mother spied
The print of Lucy's feet.

Then downwards from the steep hill's edge
They track'd the footmarks small;
And through the broken hawthorn hedge,
And by the long stonewall:

And then an open field they cross'd:
The marks were still the same;
They track'd them on, nor ever lost;
And to the bridge they came:

They follow'd from the snowy bank
Those footmarks, one by one,
Into the middle of the plank;
And further there were none!

— Yet some maintain that to this day
She is a living child;
That you may see sweet Lucy Gray
Upon the lonesome wild.

O'er rough and smooth she trips along,
And never looks behind;
And sings a solitary song
That whistles in the wind.

W. Wordsworth

227

JOCK OF HAZELDEAN

"Why weep ye by the tide, ladie?
Why weep ye by the tide?
I'll wed ye to my youngest son,
And ye sall be his bride:
And ye sall be his bride, ladie,
Sae comely to be seen" —
But aye she loot the tears down fa'
For Jock of Hazeldean.

"Now let this wilfu' grief be done,
And dry that cheek so pale;
Young Frank is chief of Errington
And lord of Langley-dale;
His step is first in peaceful ha',
His sword in battle keen" —
But aye she loot the tears down fa'
For Jock of Hazeldean.

"A chain of gold ye sall not lack,
Nor braid to bind your hair,
Nor mettled hound, nor managed hawk,
Nor palfrey fresh and fair;
And you the foremost o' them a'
Shall ride our forest queen" —
But aye she loot the tears down fa'
For Jock of Hazeldean.

The kirk was deck'd at morning-tide,
The tapers glimmer'd fair;
The priest and bridegroom wait the bride,
And dame and knight are there:
They sought her baith by bower and ha';
The ladie was not seen!
She's o'er the border, and awa'
Wi' Jock of Hazeldean.

Sir W. Scott

228

LOVE'S PHILOSOPHY

The fountains mingle with the river
And the rivers with the ocean,
The winds of heaven mix forever
With a sweet emotion;
Nothing in the world is single,
All things by a law divine
In one another's being mingle —
Why not I with thine?

See the mountains kiss high heaven,
And the waves clasp one another;
No sister flower would be forgiven
If it disdain'd its brother:
And the sunlight clasps the earth,
And the moonbeams kiss the sea —
What are all these kissings worth,
If thou kiss not me?

P. B. Shelley

229

ECHOES

How sweet the answer Echo makes
To Music at night
When, roused by lute or horn, she wakes,
And far away o'er lawns and lakes
Goes answering light!

Yet Love hath echoes truer far
And far more sweet
Than e'er, beneath the moonlight's star,
Of horn or lute or soft guitar
The songs repeat.

'Tis when the sigh, — in youth sincere
And only then,
The sigh that's breathed for one to hear —
Is by that one, that only Dear
Breathed back again.

T. Moore

230

A SERENADE

Ah! County Guy, the hour is nigh,
The sun has left the lea,
The orange flower perfumes the bower,
The breeze is on the sea.

The lark, his lay who thrill'd all day,
Sits hush'd his partner nigh;
Breeze, bird, and flower confess the hour,
But where is County Guy?

The village maid steals through the shade
Her shepherd's suit to hear;
To Beauty shy, by lattice high,
Sings highborn Cavalier.
The star of Love, all stars above,
Now reigns o'er earth and sky,
And high and low the influence know —
But where is County Guy?

Sir W. Scott

231

TO THE EVENING STAR

Gem of the crimson-color'd Even,
Companion of retiring day,
Why at the closing gates of heaven,
Beloved Star, dost thou delay?

So fair thy pensile beauty burns
When soft the tear of twilight flows;
So due thy plighted love returns
To chambers brighter than the rose;

To Peace, to Pleasure, and to Love
So kind a star thou seem'st to be,
Sure some enamor'd orb above
Descends and burns to meet with thee.

Thine is the breathing, blushing hour
When all unheavenly passions fly,
Chased by the soul-subduing power
Of Love's delicious witchery.

O! sacred to the fall of day
Queen of propitious stars, appear,

And early rise, and long delay,
When Caroline herself is here!

Shine on her chosen green resort
Whose trees the sunward summit crown,
And wanton flowers, that well may court
An angel's feet to tread them down: —

Shine on her sweetly scented road
Thou star of evening's purple dome,
That lead'st the nightingale abroad,
And guid'st the pilgrim to his home.

Shine where my charmer's sweeter breath
Embalms the soft exhaling dew,
Where dying winds a sigh bequeath
To kiss the cheek of rosy hue: —

Where, winnow'd by the gentle air,
Her silken tresses darkly flow
And fall upon her brow so fair,
Like shadows on the mountain snow.

Thus, ever thus, at day's decline
In converse sweet to wander far —
O bring with thee my Caroline,
And thou shalt be my Ruling Star!

T. Campbell

232

TO THE NIGHT

Swiftly walk over the western wave,
Spirit of Night!
Out of the misty eastern cave
Where, all the long and lone daylight,
Thou wovest dreams of joy and fear
Which make thee terrible and dear, —
Swift be thy flight!

Wrap thy form in a mantle gray
Star-inwrought;
Blind with thine hair the eyes of Day,
Kiss her until she be wearied out:
Then wander o'er city and sea and land,
Touching all with thine opiate wand —
Come, long-sought!

When I arose and saw the dawn,
I sigh'd for thee;
When light rode high, and the dew was gone,
And noon lay heavy on flower and tree,
And the weary Day turn'd to his rest
Lingering like an unloved guest,
I sigh'd for thee.

Thy brother Death came, and cried
Wouldst thou me?
Thy sweet child Sleep, the filmy-eyed,
Murmur'd like a noontide bee
Shall I nestle near thy side?
Wouldst thou me? — And I replied
No, not thee!

Death will come when thou art dead,
Soon, too soon —
Sleep will come when thou art fled;
Of neither would I ask the boon
I ask of thee, belovéd Night —
Swift be thine approaching flight,
Come soon, soon!

P. B. Shelley

233
TO A DISTANT FRIEND

Why art thou silent? Is thy love a plant
Of such weak fiber that the treacherous air
Of absence withers what was once so fair?
Is there no debt to pay, no boon to grant?

Yet have my thoughts for thee been vigilant,
Bound to thy service with unceasing care —
The mind's least generous wish a mendicant
For naught but what thy happiness could spare.

Speak! — though this soft warm heart, once free to hold
A thousand tender pleasures, thine and mine,
Be left more desolate, more dreary cold

Than a forsaken bird's-nest fill'd with snow
'Mid its own bush of leafless eglantine —
Speak, that my torturing doubts their end may know!

W. Wordsworth

234

When we two parted
In silence and tears,
Half broken-hearted,
To sever for years,
Pale grew thy cheek and cold,
Colder thy kiss;
Truly that hour foretold
Sorrow to this!

The dew of the morning
Sunk chill on my brow;
It felt like the warning
Of what I feel now.
Thy vows are all broken,
And light is thy fame:
I hear thy name spoken
And share in its shame.

They name thee before me,
A knell to mine ear;
A shudder comes o'er me —
Why wert thou so dear?
They know not I knew thee
Who knew thee too well:

Long, long shall I rue thee,
Too deeply to tell.

In secret we met:
In silence I grieve
That thy heart could forget,
Thy spirit deceive.
If I should meet thee
After long years,
How should I greet thee? —
With silence and tears.

Lord Byron

235
HAPPY INSENSIBILITY

In a drear-nighted December,
Too happy, happy tree,
Thy branches ne'er remember
Their green felicity:
The north cannot undo them
With a sleety whistle through them,
Nor frozen thawings glue them
From budding at the prime.

In a drear-nighted December,
Too happy, happy brook,
Thy bubblings ne'er remember
Apollo's summer look;
But with a sweet forgetting
They stay their crystal fretting,
Never, never petting
About the frozen time.

Ah! would 'twere so with many
A gentle girl and boy!
But were there ever any
Writhed not at passéd joy?
To know the change and feel it,
When there is none to heal it

Nor numbéd sense to steal it —
Was never said in rhyme.

J. Keats

236

Where shall the lover rest
Whom the fates sever
From his true maiden's breast
Parted forever?
Where, through groves deep and high
Sounds the far billow,
Where early violets die
Under the willow.
Eleu loro
Soft shall be his pillow.

There through the summer day
Cool streams are laving:
There, while the tempests sway,
Scarce are boughs waving;
There thy rest shalt thou take
Parted forever,
Never again to wake
Never, O never!
Eleu loro
Never, O never!

Where shall the traitor rest,
He, the deceiver,
Who could win maiden's breast,
Ruin, and leave her?
In the lost battle,
Borne down by the flying,
Where mingles war's rattle
With groans of the dying;
Eleu loro
There shall he be lying.

Her wing shall the eagle flap
O'er the falsehearted;

His warm blood the wolf shall lap
  Ere life be parted:
Shame and dishonor sit
  By his grave ever;
Blessing shall hallow it;
  Never, O never!
    Eleu loro
  Never, O never!

Sir W. Scott

237

LA BELLE DAME SANS MERCI

"O what can ail thee, knight-at-arms,
  Alone and palely loitering?
The sedge has wither'd from the lake,
  And no birds sing.

"O what can ail thee, knight-at-arms!
  So haggard and so woebegone?
The squirrel's granary is full,
  And the harvest's done.

"I see a lily on thy brow
  With anguish moist and fever-dew,
And on thy cheeks a fading rose
  Fast withereth too."

"I met a lady in the meads,
  Full beautiful — a faery's child,
Her hair was long, her foot was light,
  And her eyes were wild.

"I made a garland for her head,
  And bracelets too, and fragrant zone;
She look'd at me as she did love,
  And made sweet moan.

"I set her on my pacing steed
  And nothing else saw all day long,

For sidelong would she bend, and sing
A faery's song.

"She found me roots of relish sweet,
And honey wild and manna-dew,
And sure in language strange she said
'I love thee true.'

"She took me to her elfin grot,
And there she wept and sigh'd full sore;
And there I shut her wild wild eyes
With kisses four.

"And there she lullèd me asleep,
And there I dream'd — Ah! woe betide!
The latest dream I ever dream'd
On the cold hill's side.

"I saw pale kings and princes too,
Pale warriors, death-pale were they all:
They cried — 'La belle Dame sans Merci
Hath thee in thrall!'

"I saw their starved lips in the gloam
With horrid warning gapèd wide,
And I awoke and found me here
On the cold hill's side.

"And this is why I sojourn here
Alone and palely loitering,
Though the sedge is wither'd from the lake,
And no birds sing."

J. Keats

238

THE ROVER

A weary lot is thine, fair maid,
A weary lot is thine!
To pull the thorn thy brow to braid,
And press the rue for wine.

A lightsome eye, a soldier's mien,
A feather of the blue,
A doublet of the Lincoln green —
No more of me you knew
My Love!
No more of me you knew.

"This morn is merry June, I trow,
The rose is budding fain;
But she shall bloom in winter snow
Ere we two meet again."
He turn'd his charger as he spake
Upon the river shore,
He gave the bridle reins a shake,
Said "Adieu forevermore
My Love!
And adieu forevermore."

Sir W. Scott

239

THE FLIGHT OF LOVE

When the lamp is shatter'd
The light in the dust lies dead —
When the cloud is scatter'd,
The rainbow's glory is shed.
When the lute is broken,
Sweet tones are remember'd not;
When the lips have spoken,
Loved accents are soon forgot.

As music and splendor
Survive not the lamp and the lute,
The heart's echoes render
No song when the spirit is mute —
No song but sad dirges,
Like the wind through a ruin'd cell,
Or the mournful surges
That ring the dead seaman's knell.

When hearts have once mingled,
Love first leaves the well-built nest;

The weak one is singled
To endure what it once possesst.
O Love! who bewailest
The frailty of all things here,
Why choose you the frailest
For your cradle, your home, and your bier?

Its passions will rock thee
As the storms rock the ravens on high;
Bright reason will mock thee
Like the sun from a wintry sky.
From thy nest every rafter
Will rot, and thine eagle home
Leave thee naked to laughter,
When leaves fall and cold winds come.

P. B. Shelley

240

THE MAID OF NEIDPATH

O lovers' eyes are sharp to see,
And lovers' ears in hearing;
And love, in life's extremity,
Can lend an hour of cheering.
Disease had been in Mary's bower
And slow decay from mourning,
Though now she sits on Neidpath's tower
To watch her Love's returning.

All sunk and dim her eyes so bright,
Her form decay'd by pining,
Till through her wasted hand, at night,
You saw the taper shining.
By fits a sultry hectic hue
Across her cheek was flying;
By fits so ashy pale she grew
Her maidens thought her dying.

Yet keenest powers to see and hear
Seem'd in her frame residing;

Before the watch-dog prick'd his ear
She heard her lover's riding;
Ere scarce a distant form was kenn'd
She knew and waved to greet him,
And o'er the battlement did bend
As on the wing to meet him.

He came — he pass'd — an heedless gaze
As o'er some stranger glancing;
Her welcome, spoke in faltering phrase,
Lost in his courser's prancing —
The castle arch, whose hollow tone
Returns each whisper spoken,
Could scarcely catch the feeble moan
Which told her heart was broken.

Sir W. Scott

241

Earl March look'd on his dying child,
And, smit with grief to view her —
The youth, he cried, whom I exiled
Shall be restored to woo her.

She's at the window many an hour
His coming to discover:
And he look'd up to Ellen's bower
And she look'd on her lover —

But ah! so pale, he knew her not,
Though her smile on him was dwelling —
And am I then forgot — forgot?
It broke the heart of Ellen.

In vain he weeps, in vain he sighs,
Her cheek is cold as ashes;
Nor love's own kiss shall wake those eyes
To lift their silken lashes.

T. Campbell

242

Bright Star! would I were steadfast as thou art —
Not in lone splendor hung aloft the night,
And watching, with eternal lids apart,
Like Nature's patient sleepless Eremite,

The moving waters at their priestlike task
Of pure ablution round earth's human shores,
Or gazing on the new soft fallen mask
Of snow upon the mountains and the moors: —

No — yet still steadfast, still unchangeable,
Pillow'd upon my fair Love's ripening breast
To feel forever its soft fall and swell,
Awake forever in a sweet unrest;

Still, still to hear her tender-taken breath,
And so live ever, — or else swoon to death.

J. Keats

243

THE TERROR OF DEATH

When I have fears that I may cease to be
Before my pen has glean'd my teeming brain,
Before high-piléd books, in charact'ry
Hold like rich garners the full-ripen'd grain;

When I behold, upon the night's starr'd face,
Huge cloudy symbols of a high romance,
And think that I may never live to trace
Their shadows, with the magic hand of chance;

And when I feel, fair Creature of an hour!
That I shall never look upon thee more,
Never have relish in the faery power
Of unreflecting love — then on the shore

Of the wide world I stand alone, and think
Till Love and Fame to nothingness do sink.

244

DESIDERIA

Surprised by joy — impatient as the wind —
I turn'd to share the transport — oh! with whom
But Thee — deep buried in the silent tomb,
That spot which no vicissitude can find?

Love, faithful love recall'd thee to my mind —
But how could I forget thee? Through what power
Even for the least division of an hour
Have I been so beguiled as to be blind

To my most grievous loss! — That thought's return
Was the worst pang that sorrow ever bore
Save one, one only, when I stood forlorn,

Knowing my heart's best treasure was no more;
That neither present time, nor years unborn
Could to my sight that heavenly face restore.

W. Wordsworth

245

At the mid hour of night, when stars are weeping, I fly
To the lone vale we loved, when life shone warm in thine eye;
And I think oft, if spirits can steal from the regions of air
To revisit past scenes of delight, thou wilt come to me there
And tell me our love is remember'd, even in the sky!

Then I sing the wild song it once was rapture to hear
When our voices, commingling, breathed like one on the ear;
And as Echo far off through the vale my sad orison rolls,
I think, oh my Love! 'tis thy voice, from the Kingdom of Souls
Faintly answering still the notes that once were so dear.

T. Moore

246
ELEGY ON THYRZA

And thou art dead, as young and fair
  As aught of mortal birth;
And forms so soft and charms so rare
  Too soon return'd to Earth!
Though Earth received them in her bed,
And o'er the spot the crowd may tread
  In carelessness or mirth,
There is an eye which could not brook
A moment on that grave to look.

I will not ask where thou liest low
  Nor gaze upon the spot;
There flowers or weeds at will may grow
  So I behold them not:
It is enough for me to prove
That what I loved, and long must love,
  Like common earth can rot;
To me there needs no stone to tell
'Tis Nothing that I loved so well.

Yet did I love thee to the last,
  As fervently as thou
Who didst not change through all the past
  And canst not alter now.
The love where Death has set his seal
Nor age can chill, nor rival steal,
  Nor falsehood disavow:
And, what were worse, thou canst not see
Or wrong, or change, or fault in me.

The better days of life were ours;
  The worst can be but mine:
The sun that cheers, the storm that lours,
  Shall never more be thine.
The silence of that dreamless sleep
I envy now too much to weep;
  Nor need I to repine

That all those charms have pass'd away
I might have watch'd through long decay.

The flower in ripen'd bloom unmatch'd
Must fall the earliest prey;
Though by no hand untimely snatch'd,
The leaves must drop away.
And yet it were a greater grief
To watch it withering, leaf by leaf,
Than see it pluck'd to-day;
Since earthly eye but ill can bear
To trace the change to foul from fair.

I know not if I could have borne
To see thy beauties fade;
The night that follow'd such a morn
Had worn a deeper shade:
Thy day without a cloud hath past,
And thou wert lovely to the last,
Extinguish'd, not decay'd;
As stars that shoot along the sky
Shine brightest as they fall from high.

As once I wept, if I could weep,
My tears might well be shed
To think I was not near, to keep
One vigil o'er thy bed:
To gaze, how fondly! on thy face,
To fold thee in a faint embrace,
Uphold thy drooping head;
And show that love, however vain,
Nor thou nor I can feel again.

Yet how much less it were to gain,
Though thou hast left me free,
The loveliest things that still remain
Than thus remember thee!
The all of thine that cannot die
Through dark and dread Eternity
Returns again to me,

And more thy buried love endears
Than aught except its living years.

Lord Byron

247

One word is too often profaned
For me to profane it,
One feeling too falsely disdain'd
For thee to disdain it.
One hope is too like despair
For prudence to smother,
And pity from thee more dear
Than that from another.

I can give not what men call love;
But wilt thou accept not
The worship the heart lifts above
And the Heavens reject not:
The desire of the moth for the star,
Of the night for the morrow,
The devotion to something afar
From the sphere of our sorrow?

P. B. Shelley

248

GATHERING SONG OF DONALD THE BLACK

Pibroch of Donuil Dhu
Pibroch of Donuil
Wake thy wild voice anew,
Summon Clan Conuil.
Come away, come away,
Hark to the summons!
Come in your war array,
Gentles and commons.

Come from deep glen, and
From mountain so rocky;
The war-pipe and pennon
Are at Inverlocky.

Come every hill-plaid, and
True heart that wears one,
Come every steel blade, and
Strong hand that bears one.

Leave untended the herd,
The flock without shelter;
Leave the corpse uninterr'd,
The bride at the altar;
Leave the deer, leave the steer,
Leave nets and barges:
Come with your fighting gear,
Broadswords and targes.

Come as the winds come, when
Forests are rended,
Come as the waves come, when
Navies are stranded:
Faster come, faster come,
Faster and faster,
Chief, vassal, page and groom,
Tenant and master.

Fast they come, fast they come;
See how they gather!
Wide waves the eagle plume
Blended with heather.
Cast your plaids, draw your blades,
Forward each man set!
Pibroch of Donuil Dhu
Knell for the onset!

Sir W. Scott

249

A wet sheet and a flowing sea,
A wind that follows fast
And fills the white and rustling sail
And bends the gallant mast;
And bends the gallant mast, my boys,
While like the eagle free

Away the good ship flies, and leaves
Old England on the lee.

O for a soft and gentle wind!
I heard a fair one cry;
But give to me the snoring breeze
And white waves heaving high;
And white waves heaving high, my lads,
The good ship tight and free —
The world of waters is our home,
And merry men are we.

There's tempest in yon hornéd moon,
And lightning in yon cloud;
But hark the music, mariners!
The wind is piping loud;
The wind is piping loud, my boys,
The lightning flashes free —
While the hollow oak our palace is,
Our heritage the sea.

A. Cunningham

250

Ye Mariners of England
That guard our native seas!
Whose flag has braved, a thousand years
The battle and the breeze!
Your glorious standard launch again
To match another foe:
And sweep through the deep,
While the stormy winds do blow;
While the battle rages loud and long
And the stormy winds do blow.

The spirits of your fathers
Shall start from every wave —
For the deck it was their field of fame,
And Ocean was their grave:
Where Blake and mighty Nelson fell
Your manly hearts shall glow,

As ye sweep through the deep,
While the stormy winds do blow;
While the battle rages loud and long
And the stormy winds do blow.

Britannia needs no bulwarks,
No towers along the steep;
Her march is o'er the mountain waves
Her home is on the deep.
With thunders from her native oak
She quells the floods below —
As they roar on the shore,
When the stormy winds do blow;
When the battle rages loud and long,
And the stormy winds do blow.

The meteor flag of England
Shall yet terrific burn;
Till danger's troubled night depart
And the star of peace return.
Then, then, ye ocean warriors!
Our song and feast shall flow
To the fame of your name,
When the storm has ceased to blow;
When the fiery fight is heard no more,
And the storm has ceased to blow.

T. Campbell

251

BATTLE OF THE BALTIC

Of Nelson and the North
Sing the glorious day's renown,
When to battle fierce came forth
All the might of Denmark's crown,
And her arms along the deep proudly shone,
By each gun the lighted brand
In a bold determined hand,
And the Prince of all the land
Led them on.

Like leviathans afloat
Lay their bulwarks on the brine;
While the sign of battle flew
On the lofty British line:
It was ten of April morn by the chime:
As they drifted on their path
There was silence deep as death;
And the boldest held his breath
For a time.

But the might of England flush'd
To anticipate the scene;
And her van the fleeter rush'd
O'er the deadly space between.
"Hearts of oak!" our captains cried, when each gun
From its adamantine lips
Spread a death shade round the ships,
Like the hurricane eclipse
Of the sun.

Again! again! again!
And the havoc did not slack,
Till a feeble cheer the Dane
To our cheering sent us back; —
Their shots along the deep slowly boom: —
Then ceased — and all is wail,
As they strike the shatter'd sail;
Or in conflagration pale
Light the gloom.

Out spoke the victor then
As he hail'd them o'er the wave,
"Ye are brothers! ye are men!
And we conquer but to save: —
So peace instead of death let us bring:
But yield, proud foe, thy fleet
With the crews, at England's feet,
And make submission meet
To our King."

Then Denmark bless'd our chief
That he gave her wounds repose;
And the sounds of joy and grief
From her people wildly rose,
As death withdrew his shades from the day:
While the sun look'd smiling bright
O'er a wide and woeful sight,
Where the fires of funeral light
Died away.

Now joy, old England, raise!
For the tidings of thy might,
By the festal cities' blaze,
Whilst the wine cup shines in light;
And yet amidst that joy and uproar,
Let us think of them that sleep
Full many a fathom deep
By thy wild and stormy steep,
Elsinore!

Brave hearts! to Britain's pride
Once so faithful and so true,
On the deck of fame that died,
With the gallant good Riou:
Soft sigh the winds of Heaven o'er their grave!
While the billow mournful rolls
And the mermaid's song condoles
Singing glory to the souls
Of the brave!

T. Campbell

252

ODE TO DUTY

Stern Daughter of the Voice of God!
O Duty! if that name thou love
Who art a light to guide, a rod
To check the erring, and reprove;
Thou who art victory and law
When empty terrors overawe;

From vain temptations dost set free,
And calm'st the weary strife of frail humanity!

There are who ask not if thine eye
Be on them; who, in love and truth
Where no misgiving is, rely
Upon the genial sense of youth:
Glad hearts! without reproach or blot,
Who do thy work, and know it not:
Oh! if through confidence misplaced
They fail, thy saving arms, dread Power! around them cast.

Serene will be our days and bright
And happy will our nature be
When love is an unerring light,
And joy its own security.
And they a blissful course may hold
Ev'n now, who, not unwisely bold,
Live in the spirit of this creed;
Yet seek thy firm support, according to their need.

I, loving freedom, and untried,
No sport of every random gust,
Yet being to myself a guide,
Too blindly have reposed my trust:
And oft, when in my heart was heard
Thy timely mandate, I deferr'd
The task, in smoother walks to stray;
But thee I now would serve more strictly, if I may.

Through no disturbance of my soul
Or strong compunction in me wrought,
I supplicate for thy control,
But in the quietness of thought:
Me this uncharter'd freedom tires;
I feel the weight of chance desires:
My hopes no more must change their name;
I long for a repose that ever is the same.

Stern Lawgiver! yet thou dost wear
The Godhead's most benignant grace;
Nor know we anything so fair
As is the smile upon thy face:
Flowers laugh before thee on their beds,
And fragrance in thy footing treads;
Thou dost preserve the Stars from wrong;
And the most ancient Heavens, through Thee, are fresh and strong.

To humbler functions, awful Power!
I call thee: I myself commend
Unto thy guidance from this hour;
Oh let my weakness have an end!
Give unto me, made lowly wise,
The spirit of self-sacrifice;
The confidence of reason give;
And in the light of truth thy Bondman let me live.

W. Wordsworth

253
ON THE CASTLE OF CHILLON

Eternal Spirit of the chainless Mind!
Brightest in dungeons, Liberty! thou art,
For there thy habitation is the heart —
The heart which love of Thee alone can bind;

And when thy sons to fetters are consign'd,
To fetters, and the damp vault's dayless gloom,
Their country conquers with their martyrdom,
And Freedom's fame finds wings on every wind.

Chillon! thy prison is a holy place
And thy sad floor an altar, for 'twas trod,
Until his very steps have left a trace

Worn as if thy cold pavement were a sod,
By Bonnivard! May none those marks efface!
For they appeal from tyranny to God.

Lord Byron

254

ENGLAND AND SWITZERLAND, 1802

Two Voices are there; one is of the Sea,
One of the Mountains; each a mighty voice:
In both from age to age thou didst rejoice,
They were thy chosen music, Liberty!

There came a tyrant, and with holy glee
Thou fought'st against him, — but hast vainly striven:
Thou from thy Alpine holds at length art driven
Where not a torrent murmurs heard by thee.

— Of one deep bliss thine ear hath been bereft;
Then cleave, O cleave to that which still is left —
For, high-soul'd Maid, what sorrow would it be

That Mountain floods should thunder as before,
And Ocean bellow from his rocky shore,
And neither awful Voice be heard by Thee!

W. Wordsworth

255

ON THE EXTINCTION OF THE VENETIAN REPUBLIC

Once did She hold the gorgeous East in fee
And was the safeguard of the West, the worth
Of Venice did not fall below her birth,
Venice, the eldest child of Liberty.

She was a maiden city, bright and free,
No guile seduced, no force could violate,
And when she took unto herself a mate,
She must espouse the everlasting Sea.

And what if she had seen those glories fade,
Those titles vanish, and that strength decay, —
Yet shall some tribute of regret be paid

When her long life hath reach'd its final day:
Men are we, and must grieve when even the shade
Of that which once was great is pass'd away.
W. Wordsworth

256
LONDON, 1802

O Friend! I know not which way I must look
For comfort, being, as I am, opprest
To think that now our life is only drest
For show; mean handiwork of craftsman, cook,

Or groom! — We must run glittering like a brook
In the open sunshine, or we are unblest;
The wealthiest man among us is the best:
No grandeur now in nature or in book

Delights us. Rapine, avarice, expense,
This is idolatry; and these we adore:
Plain living and high thinking are no more:

The homely beauty of the good old cause
Is gone; our peace, our fearful innocence,
And pure religion breathing household laws.
W. Wordsworth

257
THE SAME

Milton! thou shouldst be living at this hour:
England hath need of thee: she is a fen
Of stagnant waters: altar, sword, and pen,
Fireside, the heroic wealth of hall and bower,

Have forfeited their ancient English dower
Of inward happiness. We are selfish men:
Oh! raise us up, return to us again;
And give us manners, virtue, freedom, power.

Thy soul was like a Star, and dwelt apart:
Thou hadst a voice whose sound was like the sea,
Pure as the naked heavens, majestic, free;

So didst thou travel on life's common way
In cheerful godliness; and yet thy heart
The lowliest duties on herself did lay.

W. Wordsworth

258

When I have borne in memory what has tamed
Great nations; how ennobling thoughts depart
When men change swords for ledgers, and desert
The student's bower for gold, — some fears unnamed

I had, my Country! — am I to be blamed?
Now, when I think of thee, and what thou art,
Verily, in the bottom of my heart
Of those unfilial fears I am ashamed.

For dearly must we prize thee; we who find
In thee a bulwark for the cause of men;
And I by my affection was beguiled:

What wonder if a Poet now and then,
Among the many movements of his mind,
Felt for thee as a lover or a child!

W. Wordsworth

259

HOHENLINDEN

On Linden, when the sun was low,
All bloodless lay the untrodden snow;
And dark as winter was the flow
Of Iser, rolling rapidly.

But Linden saw another sight,
When the drum beat at dead of night

Commanding fires of death to light
The darkness of her scenery.

By torch and trumpet fast array'd
Each horseman drew his battle blade,
And furious every charger neigh'd
To join the dreadful revelry.

Then shook the hills with thunder riven;
Then rush'd the steed, to battle driven;
And louder than the bolts of Heaven
Far flash'd the red artillery.

But redder yet that light shall glow
On Linden's hills of stainéd snow,
And bloodier yet the torrent flow
Of Iser, rolling rapidly.

'Tis morn; but scarce yon level sun
Can pierce the war clouds rolling dun,
Where furious Frank and fiery Hun
Shout in their sulphurous canopy.

The combat deepens. On, ye Brave
Who rush to glory, or the grave!
Wave, Munich! all thy banners wave,
And charge with all thy chivalry!

Few, few shall part, where many meet!
The snow shall be their winding sheet,
And every turf beneath their feet
Shall be a soldier's sepulcher.

T. Campbell

260

AFTER BLENHEIM

It was a summer evening,
Old Kaspar's work was done,
And he before his cottage door
Was sitting in the sun;

And by him sported on the green
His little grandchild Wilhelmine.

She saw her brother Peterkin
  Roll something large and round
Which he beside the rivulet
  In playing there had found;
He came to ask what he had found
That was so large and smooth and round.

Old Kaspar took it from the boy
  Who stood expectant by;
And then the old man shook his head,
  And with a natural sigh
"'Tis some poor fellow's skull," said he,
"Who fell in the great victory.

"I find them in the garden,
  For there's many here about;
And often when I go to plow
  The plowshare turns them out.
For many thousand men," said he,
"Were slain in that great victory."

"Now tell us what 'twas all about,"
  Young Peterkin he cries;
And little Wilhelmine looks up
  With wonder-waiting eyes;
"Now tell us all about the war,
And what they fought each other for."

"It was the English," Kaspar cried,
  "Who put the French to rout;
But what they fought each other for
  I could not well make out.
But everybody said," quoth he,
"That 'twas a famous victory.

"My father lived at Blenheim then,
  Yon little stream hard by;

They burned his dwelling to the ground,
And he was forced to fly:
So with his wife and child he fled,
Nor had he where to rest his head.

"With fire and sword the country round
Was wasted far and wide,
And many a childing mother then
And newborn baby died:
But things like that, you know, must be
At every famous victory.

"They say it was a shocking sight
After the field was won;
For many thousand bodies here
Lay rotting in the sun:
But things like that, you know, must be
After a famous victory.

"Great praise the Duke of Marlbro' won
And our good Prince Eugene;"
"Why 'twas a very wicked thing!"
Said little Wilhelmine:
"Nay . . . nay . . . my little girl," quoth he.
"It was a famous victory.

"And everybody praised the Duke
Who this great fight did win."
"But what good came of it at last?"
Quoth little Peterkin: —
"Why that I cannot tell," said he,
"But 'twas a famous victory."

R. Southey

261

PRO PATRIA MORI

When he who adores thee has left but the name
Of his fault and his sorrows behind,

Oh! say wilt thou weep, when they darken the fame
Of a life that for thee was resign'd!
Yes, weep, and however my foes may condemn,
Thy tears shall efface their decree;
For, Heaven can witness, though guilty to them,
I have been but too faithful to thee.

With thee were the dreams of my earliest love;
Every thought of my reason was thine:
In my last humble prayer to the Spirit above
Thy name shall be mingled with mine!
Oh! blest are the lovers and friends who shall live
The days of thy glory to see;
But the next dearest blessing that Heaven can give
Is the pride of thus dying for thee.

T. Moore

262

THE BURIAL OF SIR JOHN MOORE AT CORUNNA

Not a drum was heard, not a funeral note,
As his corpse to the rampart we hurried;
Not a soldier discharged his farewell shot
O'er the grave where our hero we buried.

We buried him darkly at dead of night,
The sods with our bayonets turning;
By the struggling moonbeam's misty light
And the lantern dimly burning.

No useless coffin inclosed his breast,
Not in sheet or in shroud we wound him;
But he lay like a warrior taking his rest,
With his martial cloak around him.

Few and short were the prayers we said,
And we spoke not a word of sorrow;
But we steadfastly gazed on the face that was dead,
And we bitterly thought of the morrow.

We thought, as we hollow'd his narrow bed
And smoothed down his lonely pillow,
That the foe and the stranger would tread o'er his head,
And we far away on the billow!

Lightly they'll talk of the spirit that's gone
And o'er his cold ashes upbraid him, —
But little he'll reck, if they let him sleep on
In the grave where a Briton has laid him.

But half of our heavy task was done
When the clock struck the hour for retiring:
And we heard the distant and random gun
That the foe was sullenly firing.

Slowly and sadly we laid him down,
From the field of his fame fresh and gory;
We carved not a line, and we raised not a stone,
But we left him alone with his glory.

C. Wolfe

263

SIMON LEE, THE OLD HUNTSMAN

In the sweet shire of Cardigan,
Not far from pleasant Ivor Hall,
An old man dwells, a little man, —
'Tis said he once was tall.
Full five-and-thirty years he lived
A running huntsman merry;
And still the center of his cheek
Is red as a ripe cherry.

No man like him the horn could sound,
And hill and valley rang with glee,
When Echo bandied, round and round,
The halloo of Simon Lee.
In those proud days he little cared
For husbandry or tillage;
To blither tasks did Simon rouse
The sleepers of the village.

He all the country could outrun,
Could leave both man and horse behind;
And often, ere the chase was done
He reel'd and was stone-blind.
And still there's something in the world
At which his heart rejoices;
For when the chiming hounds are out,
He dearly loves their voices.

But oh the heavy change! — bereft
Of health, strength, friends, and kindred, see!
Old Simon to the world is left
In liveried poverty: —
His master's dead, and no one now
Dwells in the Hall of Ivor;
Men, dogs, and horses, all are dead;
He is the sole survivor.

And he is lean and he is sick,
His body, dwindled and awry,
Rests upon ankles swoln and thick;
His legs are thin and dry.
One prop he has, and only one, —
His wife, an aged woman,
Lives with him, near the waterfall,
Upon the village common.

Beside their moss-grown hut of clay,
Not twenty paces from the door,
A scrap of land they have, but they
Are poorest of the poor.
This scrap of land he from the heath
Inclosed when he was stronger;
But what to them avails the land
Which he can till no longer?

Oft, working by her husband's side,
Ruth does what Simon cannot do;
For she, with scanty cause for pride,
Is stouter of the two.

And, though you with your utmost skill
From labor could not wean them,
'Tis little, very little, all
That they can do between them.

Few months of life has he in store
As he to you will tell,
For still, the more he works, the more
Do his weak ankles swell.
My gentle Reader, I perceive
How patiently you've waited,
And now I fear that you expect
Some tale will be related.

O Reader! had you in your mind
Such stores as silent thought can bring,
O gentle Reader! you would find
A tale in everything.
What more I have to say is short,
And you must kindly take it:
It is no tale; but, should you think,
Perhaps a tale you'll make it.

One summer day I chanced to see
This old Man doing all he could
To unearth the root of an old tree,
A stump of rotten wood.
The mattock totter'd in his hand;
So vain was his endeavor
That at the root of the old tree
He might have work'd forever.

"You're overtask'd, good Simon Lee,
Give me your tool," to him I said;
And at the word right gladly he Received my proffer'd aid.
I struck, and with a single blow
The tangled root I sever'd,
At which the poor old man so long
And vainly had endeavor'd.

The tears into his eyes were brought,
And thanks and praises seem'd to run
So fast out of his heart, I thought
They never would have done.
— I've heard of hearts unkind, kind deeds
With coldness still returning;
Alas! the gratitude of men
Hath oftener left me mourning.

W. Wordsworth

264
THE OLD FAMILIAR FACES

I have had playmates, I have had companions,
In my days of childhood, in my joyful school-days:
All, all are gone, the old familiar faces.

I have been laughing, I have been carousing,
Drinking late, sitting late, with my bosom cronies;
All, all are gone, the old familiar faces.

I loved a Love once, fairest among women:
Closed are her doors on me, I must not see her —
All, all are gone, the old familiar faces.

I have a friend, a kinder friend has no man:
Like an ingrate, I left my friend abruptly;
Left him, to muse on the old familiar faces.

Ghostlike I paced round the haunts of my childhood,
Earth seem'd a desert I was bound to traverse,
Seeking to find the old familiar faces.

Friend of my bosom, thou more than a brother,
Why wert not thou born in my father's dwelling?
So might we talk of the old familiar faces,

How some they have died, and some they have left me,
And some are taken from me; all are departed;
All, all are gone, the old familiar faces.

C. Lamb

265
THE JOURNEY ONWARDS

As slow our ship her foamy track
  Against the wind was cleaving,
Her trembling pennant still look'd back
  To that dear isle 'twas leaving.
So loth we part from all we love,
  From all the links that bind us;
So turn our hearts, as on we rove,
  To those we've left behind us!

When, round the bowl, of vanish'd years
  We talk with joyous seeming —
With smiles that might as well be tears,
  So faint, so sad their beaming;
While memory brings us back again
  Each early tie that twined us,
Oh, sweet's the cup that circles then
  To those we've left behind us!

And when, in other climes, we meet
  Some isle or vale enchanting,
Where all looks flowery, wild, and sweet,
  And naught but love is wanting;
We think how great had been our bliss
  If Heaven had but assign'd us
To live and die in scenes like this,
  With some we've left behind us!

As travelers oft look back at eve
  When eastward darkly going,
To gaze upon that light they leave
  Still faint behind them glowing, —
So, when the close of pleasure's day
  To gloom hath near consign'd us,
We turn to catch one fading ray
  Of joy that is left behind us.

T. Moore

266

YOUTH AND AGE

There's not a joy the world can give like that it takes away
When the glow of early thought declines in feeling's dull decay;
'Tis not on youth's smooth cheek the blush alone, which fades so fast,
But the tender bloom of heart is gone, ere youth itself be past.

Then the few whose spirits float above the wreck of happiness
Are driven o'er the shoals of guilt, or ocean of excess:
The magnet of their course is gone, or only points in vain
The shore to which their shiver'd sail shall never stretch again.

Then the mortal coldness of the soul like death itself comes down;
It cannot feel for others' woes, it dare not dream its own;
That heavy chill has frozen o'er the fountain of our tears,
And though the eye may sparkle still, 'tis where the ice appears.

Though wit may flash from fluent lips, and mirth distract the breast,
Through midnight hours that yield no more their former hope of rest;
'Tis but as ivy leaves around the ruin'd turret wreathe,
All green and wildly fresh without, but worn and gray beneath.

Oh could I feel as I have felt, or be what I have been,
Or weep as I could once have wept o'er many a vanish'd scene, —
As springs in deserts found seem sweet, all brackish though they be,
So midst the wither'd waste of life, those tears would flow to me!

Lord Byron

267

A LESSON

There is a Flower, the lesser Celandine,
That shrinks like many more from cold and rain,
And the first moment that the sun may shine,
Bright as the sun himself, 'tis out again!

When hailstones have been falling, swarm on swarm
Or blasts the green field and the trees distrest,
Oft have I seen it muffled up from harm
In close self-shelter, like a thing at rest.

But lately, one rough day, this Flower I past,
And recognized it, though an alter'd form,
Now standing forth an offering to the blast,
And buffeted at will by rain and storm.

I stopp'd and said, with inly-mutter'd voice,
"It doth not love the shower, nor seek the cold;
This neither is its courage nor its choice,
But its necessity in being old.

"The sunshine may not cheer it, nor the dew;
It cannot help itself in its decay;
Stiff in its members, wither'd, changed of hue," —
And, in my spleen, I smiled that it was gray.

To be a prodigal's favorite — then, worse truth,
A miser's pensioner — behold our lot!
O Man! that from thy fair and shining youth
Age might but take the things Youth needed not!

W. Wordsworth

298

PAST AND PRESENT

I remember, I remember
The house where I was born,

The little window where the sun
Came peeping in at morn;
He never came a wink too soon
Nor brought too long a day;
But now, I often wish the night
Had borne my breath away.

I remember, I remember
The roses, red and white,
The violets, and the lily cups —
Those flowers made of light!
The lilacs where the robin built,
And where my brother set
The laburnum on his birthday, —
The tree is living yet.

I remember, I remember
Where I was used to swing,
And thought the air must rush as fresh
To swallows on the wing;
My spirit flew in feathers then
That is so heavy now,
And summer pools could hardly cool
The fever on my brow.

I remember, I remember,
The fir trees dark and high;
I used to think their slender tops
Were close against the sky:
It was a childish ignorance,
But now 'tis little joy
To know I'm farther off from Heaven
Than when I was a boy.

T. Hood

269

THE LIGHT OF OTHER DAYS

Oft in the stilly night
Ere slumber's chain has bound me,

Fond Memory brings the light
Of other days around me:
The smiles, the tears
Of boyhood's years,
The words of love then spoken;
The eyes that shone,
Now dimm'd and gone,
The cheerful hearts now broken!
Thus in the stilly night
Ere slumber's chain has bound me,
Sad Memory brings the light
Of other days around me.

When I remember all
The friends so link'd together
I've seen around me fall
Like leaves in wintry weather,
I feel like one
Who treads alone
Some banquet hall deserted,
Whose lights are fled,
Whose garlands dead,
And all but he departed!
Thus in the stilly night
Ere slumber's chain has bound me,
Sad Memory brings the light
Of other days around me.

T. Moore

270

STANZAS WRITTEN IN DEJECTION NEAR NAPLES

The sun is warm, the sky is clear,
The waves are dancing fast and bright,
Blue isles and snowy mountains wear
The purple noon's transparent might:
The breath of the moist earth is light
Around its unexpanded buds;
Like many a voice of one delight —
The winds', the birds', the ocean-floods' —
The city's voice itself is soft like Solitude's.

I see the deep's untrampled floor
With green and purple seaweeds strown;
I see the waves upon the shore
Like light dissolved in star showers thrown:
I sit upon the sands alone;
The lightning of the noontide ocean
Is flashing round me, and a tone
Arises from its measured motion —
How sweet! did any heart now share in my emotion.

Alas! I have nor hope nor health,
Nor peace within nor calm around,
Nor that content, surpassing wealth,
The sage in meditation found,
And walk'd with inward glory crown'd —
Nor fame, nor power, nor love, nor leisure;
Others I see whom these surround —
Smiling they live, and call life pleasure;
To me that cup has been dealt in another measure.

Yet now despair itself is mild
Even as the winds and waters are;
I could lie down like a tired child,
And weep away the life of care
Which I have borne, and yet must bear, —
Till death like sleep might steal on me,
And I might feel in the warm air
My cheek grow cold, and hear the sea
Breathe o'er my dying brain its last monotony.

P. B. Shelley

271

THE SCHOLAR

My days among the Dead are past;
Around me I behold,
Where'er these casual eyes are cast,
The mighty minds of old:
My never-failing friends are they,
With whom I converse day by day.

With them I take delight in weal
And seek relief in woe;
And while I understand and feel
How much to them I owe,
My cheeks have often been bedew'd
With tears of thoughtful gratitude.

My thoughts are with the Dead; with them
I live in long-past years,
Their virtues love, their faults condemn,
Partake their hopes and fears,
And from their lessons seek and find
Instruction with an humble mind.

My hopes are with the Dead; anon
My place with them will be,
And I with them shall travel on Through all Futurity;
Yet leaving here a name, I trust,
That will not perish in the dust.

R. Southey

272

THE MERMAID TAVERN

Souls of Poets dead and gone,
What Elysium have ye known,
Happy field or mossy cavern,
Choicer than the Mermaid Tavern?
Have ye tippled drink more fine
Than mine host's Canary wine?
Or are fruits of Paradise
Sweeter than those dainty pies
Of venison? O generous food!
Dressed as though bold Robin Hood
Would, with his Maid Marian,
Sup and bowse from horn and can.

I have heard that on a day
Mine host's signboard flew away

Nobody knew whither, till
An astrologer's old quill
To a sheepskin gave the story,
Said he saw you in your glory,
Underneath a new-old sign
Sipping beverage divine,
And pledging with contented smack
The Mermaid in the Zodiac.

Souls of Poets dead and gone,
What Elysium have ye known,
Happy field or mossy cavern,
Choicer than the Mermaid Tavern?

J. Keats

273
THE PRIDE OF YOUTH

Proud Maisie is in the wood,
Walking so early;
Sweet Robin sits on the bush,
Singing so rarely.

"Tell me, thou bonny bird,
When shall I marry me?"
— "When six braw gentlemen
Kirkward shall carry ye."

"Who makes the bridal bed, Birdie say truly?"
— "The gray-headed sexton
That delves the grave duly.

"The glowworm o'er grave and stone
Shall light thee steady;
The owl from the steeple sing
Welcome, proud lady."

Sir W. Scott

274

THE BRIDGE OF SIGHS

One more Unfortunate,
Weary of breath,
Rashly importunate,
Gone to her death!
Take her up tenderly,
Lift her with care;
Fashion'd so slenderly,
Young, and so fair!

Look at her garments
Clinging like cerements;
Whilst the wave constantly
Drips from her clothing;
Take her up instantly,
Loving, not loathing.

Touch her not scornfully,
Think of her mournfully,
Gently and humanly;
Not of the stains of her —
All that remains of her
Now is pure womanly.

Make no deep scrutiny
Into her mutiny
Rash and undutiful:
Past all dishonor,
Death has left on her
Only the beautiful.

Still, for all slips of hers,
One of Eve's family —
Wipe those poor lips of hers
Oozing so clammily.

Loop up her tresses
Escaped from the comb,

Her fair auburn tresses;
Whilst wonderment guesses
Where was her home?

Who was her father?
Who was her mother?
Had she a sister?
Had she a brother?
Or was there a dearer one
Still, and a nearer one
Yet, than all other?

Alas! for the rarity
Of Christian charity
Under the sun!
Oh! it was pitiful!
Near a whole city full,
Home she had none.

Sisterly, brotherly,
Fatherly, motherly
Feelings had changed:
Love, by harsh evidence,
Thrown from its eminence;
Even God's providence
Seeming estranged.

Where the lamps quiver
So far in the river,
With many a light
From window and casement,
From garret to basement,
She stood with amazement,
Houseless by night.

The bleak wind of March
Made her tremble and shiver
But not the dark arch,
Or the black flowing river:
Mad from life's history,

Glad to death's mystery
Swift to be hurl'd —
Anywhere, anywhere,
Out of the world!

In she plunged boldly,
No matter how coldly
The rough river ran, —
Over the brink of it,
Picture it — think of it,
Dissolute Man!
Lave in it, drink of it,
Then, if you can!

Take her up tenderly,
Lift her with care;
Fashion'd so slenderly,
Young, and so fair!

Ere her limbs frigidly
Stiffen too rigidly,
Decently, kindly,
Smooth and compose them,
And her eyes, close them,
Staring so blindly!

Dreadfully staring
Thro' muddy impurity,
As when with the daring
Last look of despairing
Fix'd on futurity.

Perishing gloomily,
Spurr'd by contumely,
Cold inhumanity,
Burning insanity,
Into her rest.
Cross her hands humbly
As if praying dumbly,
Over her breast!

Owning her weakness,
Her evil behavior,
And leaving, with meekness,
Her sins to her Saviour.

T. Hood

275
ELEGY

Oh snatch'd away in beauty's bloom!
On thee shall press no ponderous tomb;
But on thy turf shall roses rear
Their leaves, the earliest of the year,
And the wild cypress wave in tender gloom:

And oft by yon blue gushing stream
Shall Sorrow lean her drooping head,
And feed deep thought with many a dream,
And lingering pause and lightly tread;
Fond wretch! as if her step disturb'd the dead!

Away! we know that tears are vain,
That Death nor heeds nor hears distress:
Will this unteach us to complain?
Or make one mourner weep the less?
And thou, who tell'st me to forget,
Thy looks are wan, thine eyes are wet.

Lord Byron

276
HESTER

When maidens such as Hester die
Their place ye may not well supply,
Though ye among a thousand try
With vain endeavor.
A month or more hath she been dead,
Yet cannot I by force be led
To think upon the wormy bed
And her together.

A springy motion in her gait,
A rising step, did indicate
Of pride and joy no common rate
That flush'd her spirit:
I know not by what name beside
I shall it call: if 'twas not pride,
It was a joy to that allied
She did inherit.

Her parents held the Quaker rule,
Which doth the human feeling cool;
But she was train'd in Nature's school,
Nature had blest her.
A waking eye, a prying mind,
A heart that stirs, is hard to bind;
A hawk's keen sight ye cannot blind,
Ye could not Hester.

My sprightly neighbor! gone before
To that unknown and silent shore,
Shall we not meet, as heretofore
Some summer morning —
When from thy cheerful eyes a ray
Hath struck a bliss upon the day,
A bliss that would not go away,
A sweet forewarning?

C. Lamb

277
TO MARY

If I had thought thou couldst have died,
I might not weep for thee;
But I forgot, when by thy side,
That thou couldst mortal be:
It never through my mind had past
The time would e'er be o'er,
And I on thee should look my last,
And thou shouldst smile no more!

And still upon that face I look,
  And think 'twill smile again;
And still the thought I will not brook
  That I must look in vain!
But when I speak — thou dost not say
  What thou ne'er left'st unsaid;
And now I feel, as well I may,
  Sweet Mary! thou art dead!

If thou wouldst stay, e'en as thou art,
  All cold and all serene —
I still might press thy silent heart,
  And where thy smiles have been.
While e'en thy chill, bleak corpse I have
  Thou seemest still mine own;
But there I lay thee in thy grave —
  And I am now alone!

I do not think, where'er thou art,
  Thou hast forgotten me;
And I, perhaps, may soothe this heart,
  In thinking too of thee:
Yet there was round thee such a dawn
  Of light ne'er seen before,
As fancy never could have drawn,
  And never can restore!

C. Wolfe

278

CORONACH

He is gone on the mountain,
  He is lost to the forest,
Like a summer-dried fountain,
  When our need was the sorest.
The font reappearing
  From the raindrops shall borrow,
But to us comes no cheering,
  To Duncan no morrow!

The hand of the reaper
Takes the ears that are hoary,
But the voice of the weeper
Wails manhood in glory.
The autumn winds rushing
Waft the leaves that are searest,
But our flower was in flushing
When blighting was nearest.

Fleet foot on the correi,
Sage counsel in cumber,
Red hand in the foray,
How sound is thy slumber!
Like the dew on the mountain,
Like the foam on the river,
Like the bubble on the fountain,
Thou art gone; and forever!

Sir W. Scott

279

THE DEATH BED

We watch'd her breathing thro' the night,
Her breathing soft and low,
As in her breast the wave of life
Kept heaving to and fro.

So silently we seem'd to speak,
So slowly moved about,
As we had lent her half our powers
To eke her living out.

Our very hopes belied our fears,
Our fears our hopes belied —
We thought her dying when she slept,
And sleeping when she died.

For when the morn came dim and sad
And chill with early showers,

Her quiet eyelids closed — she had Another morn than ours.

T. Hood

280

AGNES

I saw her in childhood —
A bright, gentle thing,
Like the dawn of the morn,
Or the dews of the spring:
The daisies and harebells
Her playmates all day;
Herself as light-hearted
And artless as they.

I saw her again —
A fair girl of eighteen,
Fresh glittering with graces
Of mind and of mien.
Her speech was all music;
Like moonlight she shone;
The envy of many,
The glory of one.

Years, years fleeted over —
I stood at her foot:
The bud had grown blossom,
The blossom was fruit.
A dignified mother,
Her infant she bore;
And look'd, I thought, fairer
Than ever before.

I saw her once more —
'Twas the day that she died;
Heaven's light was around her,
And God at her side;
No wants to distress her,
No fears to appall —

O then, I felt, then
She was fairest of all!

H. F. Lyte

281

ROSABELLE

O listen, listen, ladies gay!
No haughty feat of arms I tell;
Soft is the note, and sad the lay
That mourns the lovely Rosabelle.

"Moor, moor the barge, ye gallant crew!
And, gentle ladye, deign to stay!
Rest thee in Castle Ravensheuch,
Nor tempt the stormy firth to-day.

"The blackening wave is edged with white;
To inch and rock the sea mews fly;
The fishers have heard the Water Sprite,
Whose screams forebode that wreck is nigh.

"Last night the gifted Seer did view
A wet shroud swathed round ladye gay;
Then stay thee, Fair, in Ravensheuch;
Why cross the gloomy firth to-day?"

"'Tis not because Lord Lindesay's heir
To-night at Roslin leads the ball,
But that my ladye-mother there
Sits lonely in her castle hall.

"'Tis not because the ring they ride,
And Lindesay at the ring rides well,
But that my sire the wine will chide
If 'tis not fill'd by Rosabelle."

— O'er Roslin all that dreary night
A wondrous blaze was seen to gleam;
'Twas broader than the watch-fire's light,
And redder than the bright moonbeam.

It glared on Roslin's castled rock,
It ruddied all the copse-wood glen;
'Twas seen from Dryden's groves of oak,
And seen from cavern'd Hawthornden.

Seem'd all on fire that chapel proud
Where Roslin's chiefs uncoffin'd lie,
Each Baron, for a sable shroud,
Sheathed in his iron panoply.

Seem'd all on fire within, around,
Deep sacristy and altar's pale;
Shone every pillar foliage-bound,
And glimmer'd all the dead men's mail.

Blazed battlement and pinnet high,
Blazed every rose-carved buttress fair —
So still they blaze, when fate is nigh
The lordly line of high Saint Clair.

There are twenty of Roslin's barons bold —
Lie buried within that proud chapelle;
Each one the holy vault doth hold —
But the sea holds lovely Rosabelle.

And each Saint Clair was buried there,
With candle, with book, and with knell;
But the sea caves rung, and the wild winds sung
The dirge of lovely Rosabelle.

Sir W. Scott

282

ON AN INFANT DYING AS SOON AS BORN

I saw wherein the shroud did lurk
A curious frame of Nature's work;
A flow'ret crushéd in the bud,
A nameless piece of Babyhood,
Was in her cradle-coffin lying;
Extinct, with scarce the sense of dying:

So soon to exchange the imprisoning womb
For darker closets of the tomb!
She did but ope an eye, and put
A clear beam forth, then straight up shut
For the long dark: ne'er more to see
Through glasses of mortality.
Riddle of destiny, who can show
What thy short visit meant, or know
What thy errand here below?
Shall we say, that Nature blind
Check'd her hand, and changed her mind
Just when she had exactly wrought
A finish'd pattern without fault?
Could she flag, or could she tire,
Or lack'd she the Promethean fire
(With her nine moons' long workings sicken'd)
That should thy little limbs have quicken'd?
Limbs so firm, they seem'd to assure
Life of health, and days mature:
Woman's self in miniature!
Limbs so fair, they might supply
(Themselves now but cold imagery)
The sculptor to make Beauty by.
Or did the stern-eyed Fate descry
That babe or mother, one must die;
So in mercy left the stock
And cut the branch; to save the shock
Of young years widow'd, and the pain
When Single State comes back again
To the lone man who, reft of wife,
Thenceforward drags a maimèd life?
The economy of Heaven is dark,
And wisest clerks have miss'd the mark
Why human buds, like this, should fall,
More brief than fly ephemeral
That has his day; while shrivel'd crones
Stiffen with age to stocks and stones;
And crabbèd use the conscience sears
In sinners of an hundred years.
Mother's prattle, mother's kiss,

Baby fond, thou ne'er wilt miss:
Rites, which custom does impose,
Silver bells, and baby clothes;
Coral redder than those lips
Which pale death did late eclipse;
Music framed for infants' glee,
Whistle never tuned for thee;
Though thou want'st not, thou shalt have them,
Loving hearts were they which gave them.
Let not one be missing; nurse,
See them laid upon the hearse
Of infant slain by doom perverse.
Why should kings and nobles have
Pictured trophies to their grave,
And we, churls, to thee deny
Thy pretty toys with thee to lie —
A more harmless vanity?

C. Lamb

283
IN MEMORIAM

A child's a plaything for an hour;
  Its pretty tricks we try
For that or for a longer space, —
  Then tire, and lay it by.

But I knew one that to itself
  All seasons could control;
That would have mock'd the sense of pain
  Out of a grievéd soul.

Thou straggler into loving arms,
  Young climber up of knees,
When I forget thy thousand ways
  Then life and all shall cease!

M. Lamb

284
THE AFFLICTION OF MARGARET

Where art thou, my beloved Son,
Where art thou, worse to me than dead?
Oh find me, prosperous or undone!
Or if the grave be now thy bed,
Why am I ignorant of the same
That I may rest; and neither blame
Nor sorrow may attend thy name?

Seven years, alas! to have received
No tidings of an only child —
To have despair'd, have hoped, believed,
And been forever more beguiled, —
Sometimes with thoughts of very bliss!
I catch at them, and then I miss;
Was ever darkness like to this?

He was among the prime in worth,
An object beauteous to behold;
Well born, well bred; I sent him forth
Ingenuous, innocent, and bold:
If things ensued that wanted grace
As hath been said, they were not base;
And never blush was on my face.

Ah! little doth the young one dream
When full of play and childish cares,
What power is in his wildest scream
Heard by his mother unawares!
He knows it not, he cannot guess;
Years to a mother bring distress;
But do not make her love the less.

Neglect me! no, I suffer'd long
From that ill thought; and being blind
Said, "Pride shall help me in my wrong:
Kind mother have I been, as kind
As ever breathed:" and that is true;
I've wet my path with tears like dew,
Weeping for him when no one knew.

My Son, if thou be humbled, poor,
Hopeless of honor and of gain,
Oh! do not dread thy mother's door;
Think not of me with grief and pain:
I now can see with better eyes;
And worldly grandeur I despise
And fortune with her gifts and lies.

Alas! the fowls of heaven have wings,
And blasts of heaven will aid their flight;
They mount — how short a voyage brings
The wanderers back to their delight!
Chains tie us down by land and sea;
And wishes, vain as mine, may be
All that is left to comfort thee.

Perhaps some dungeon hears thee groan
Maim'd, mangled by inhuman men;
Or thou upon a desert thrown
Inheritest the lion's den;
Or hast been summon'd to the deep
Thou, thou, and all thy mates to keep
An incommunicable sleep.

I look for ghosts; but none will force
Their way to me; 'tis falsely said
That there was ever intercourse
Between the living and the dead;
For surely then I should have sight
Of him I wait for day and night
With love and longings infinite.

My apprehensions come in crowds;
I dread the rustling of the grass;
The very shadows of the clouds
Have power to shake me as they pass:
I question things, and do not find
One that will answer to my mind;
And all the world appears unkind.

Beyond participation lie
My troubles, and beyond relief:
If any chance to heave a sigh
They pity me, and not my grief.
Then come to me, my Son, or send
Some tidings that my woes may end!
I have no other earthly friend.

W. Wordsworth

285

HUNTING SONG

Waken, lords and ladies gay,
On the mountain dawns the day;
All the jolly chase is here
With hawk and horse and hunting spear;
Hounds are in their couples yelling,
Hawks are whistling, horns are knelling,
Merrily, merrily mingle they,
"Waken, lords and ladies gay."

Waken, lords and ladies gay,
The mist has left the mountain gray,
Springlets in the dawn are steaming,
Diamonds on the brake are gleaming;
And foresters have busy been
To track the buck in thicket green;
Now we come to chant our lay,
"Waken, lords and ladies gay."

Waken, lords and ladies gay,
To the greenwood haste away,
We can show you where he lies,
Fleet of foot and tall of size;
We can show the marks he made
When 'gainst the oak his antlers fray'd;
You shall see him brought to bay;
"Waken, lords and ladies gay."

Louder, louder chant the lay
Waken, lords and ladies gay!
Tell them youth and mirth and glee
Run a course as well as we;
Time, stern huntsman! who can balk,
Stanch as hound and fleet as hawk;
Think of this, and rise with day,
Gentle lords and ladies gay!

Sir W. Scott

286

TO THE SKYLARK

Ethereal minstrel! pilgrim of the sky!
Dost thou despise the earth where cares abound?
Or while the wings aspire, are heart and eye
Both with thy nest upon the dewy ground?
Thy nest which thou canst drop into at will,
Those quivering wings composed, that music still!

To the last point of vision, and beyond
Mount, daring warbler! — that love-prompted strain
— 'Twixt thee and thine a never-failing bond —
Thrills not the less the bosom of the plain:
Yet might'st thou seem, proud privilege! to sing
All independent of the leafy Spring.

Leave to the nightingale her shady wood;
A privacy of glorious light is thine,
Whence thou dost pour upon the world a flood
Of harmony, with instinct more divine;
Type of the wise, who soar, but never roam —
True to the kindred points of Heaven and Home.

W. Wordsworth

287

TO A SKYLARK

Hail to thee, blithe Spirit!
Bird thou never wert,

That from heaven, or near it
Pourest thy full heart
In profuse strains of unpremeditated art.

Higher still and higher
From the earth thou springest,
Like a cloud of fire,
The blue deep thou wingest,
And singing still dost soar, and soaring ever singest.

In the golden lightning
Of the sunken sun
O'er which clouds are brightening,
Thou dost float and run,
Like an unbodied joy whose race is just begun.

The pale purple even
Melts around thy flight;
Like a star of heaven
In the broad daylight
Thou art unseen, but yet I hear thy shrill delight:

Keen as are the arrows
Of that silver sphere,
Whose intense lamp narrows
In the white dawn clear
Until we hardly see, we feel that it is there.

All the earth and air
With thy voice is loud,
As, when night is bare,
From one lonely cloud
The moon rains out her beams, and heaven is overflow'd.

What thou art we know not;
What is most like thee?
From rainbow clouds there flow not
Drops so bright to see
As from thy presence showers a rain of melody; —

Like a poet hidden
In the light of thought,
Singing hymns unbidden,
Till the world is wrought
To sympathy with hopes and fears it heeded not:

Like a high-born maiden
In a palace tower,
Soothing her love-laden
Soul in secret hour
With music sweet as love, which overflows her bower:

Like a glowworm golden
In a dell of dew,
Scattering unbeholden
Its aërial hue
Among the flowers and grass, which screen it from the view:

Like a rose embower'd
In its own green leaves,
By warm winds deflower'd,
Till the scent it gives
Makes faint with too much sweet these heavy-wingéd thieves.

Sound of vernal showers
On the twinkling grass,
Rain-awaken'd flowers,
All that ever was
Joyous, and clear, and fresh, thy music doth surpass.

Teach us, sprite or bird,
What sweet thoughts are thine:
I have never heard
Praise of love or wine
That panted forth a flood of rapture so divine.

Chorus hymeneal
Or triumphal chaunt

Match'd with thine, would be all
But an empty vaunt —
A thing wherein we feel there is some hidden want.

What objects are the fountains
Of thy happy strain?
What fields, or waves, or mountains?
What shapes of sky or plain?
What love of thine own kind? what ignorance of pain?

With thy clear keen joyance
Languor cannot be:
Shadow of annoyance
Never came near thee:
Thou lovest; but ne'er knew love's sad satiety.

Waking or asleep
Thou of death must deem
Things more true and deep
Than we mortals dream,
Or how could thy notes flow in such a crystal stream?

We look before and after,
And pine for what is not:
Our sincerest laughter
With some pain is fraught;
Our sweetest songs are those that tell of saddest thought.

Yet if we could scorn
Hate, and pride, and fear;
If we were things born
Not to shed a tear,
I know not how thy joy we ever should come near.

Better than all measures
Of delightful sound,
Better than all treasures
That in books are found,
Thy skill to poet were, thou scorner of the ground!

Teach me half the gladness
That thy brain must know,
Such harmonious madness
From my lips would flow,
The world should listen then, as I am listening now!

P. B. Shelley

288

THE GREEN LINNET

Beneath these fruit-tree boughs that shed
Their snow-white blossoms on my head,
With brightest sunshine round me spread
Of Spring's unclouded weather,
In this sequester'd nook how sweet
To sit upon my orchard seat!
And flowers and birds once more to greet,
My last year's friends together.

One have I mark'd, the happiest guest
In all this covert of the blest:
Hail to Thee, far above the rest
In joy of voice and pinion!
Thou, Linnet! in thy green array
Presiding Spirit here to-day
Dost lead the revels of the May;
And this is thy dominion.

While birds, and butterflies, and flowers,
Make all one band of paramours,
Thou, ranging up and down the bowers,
Art sole in thy employment;
A Life, a Presence like the air,
Scattering thy gladness without care,
Too blest with any one to pair;
Thyself thy own enjoyment.

Amid yon tuft of hazel trees
That twinkle to the gusty breeze,
Behold him perch'd in ecstasies

Yet seeming still to hover;
There! where the flutter of his wings
Upon his back and body flings
Shadows and sunny glimmerings,
That cover him all over.

My dazzled sight he oft deceives —
A brother of the dancing leaves;
Then flits, and from the cottage eaves
Pours forth his song in gushes;
As if by that exulting strain
He mock'd and treated with disdain
The voiceless Form he chose to feign,
While fluttering in the bushes.

W. Wordsworth

289

TO THE CUCKOO

O blithe newcomer! I have heard,
I hear thee and rejoice:
O Cuckoo! shall I call thee Bird,
Or but a wandering Voice?

While I am lying on the grass
Thy twofold shout I hear;
From hill to hill it seems to pass,
At once far off and near.

Though babbling only to the vale
Of sunshine and of flowers,
Thou bringest unto me a tale
Of visionary hours.

Thrice welcome, darling of the Spring!
Even yet thou art to me
No bird, but an invisible thing,
A voice, a mystery;

The same whom in my schoolboy days
I listen'd to; that Cry
Which made me look a thousand ways
In bush, and tree, and sky.

To seek thee did I often rove
Through woods and on the green;
And thou wert still a hope, a love;
Still long'd for, never seen!

And I can listen to thee yet;
Can lie upon the plain
And listen, till I do beget
That golden time again.

O blesséd Bird! the earth we pace
Again appears to be
An unsubstantial, faery place,
That is fit home for Thee!

W. Wordsworth

290

ODE TO A NIGHTINGALE

My heart aches, and a drowsy numbness pains
My sense, as though of hemlock I had drunk,
Or emptied some dull opiate to the drains
One minute past, and Lethe-wards had sunk:
'Tis not through envy of thy happy lot,
But being too happy in thine happiness, —
That thou, light-wingéd Dryad of the trees,
In some melodious plot
Of beechen green, and shadows numberless,
Singest of summer in full-throated ease.

O, for a draft of vintage! that hath been
Cool'd a long age in the deep-delvéd earth,
Tasting of Flora and the country green,
Dance, and Provençal song, and sunburned mirth!

O for a beaker full of the warm South,
Full of the true, the blushful Hippocrene,
With beaded bubbles winking at the brim,
And purple-stainéd mouth:
That I might drink, and leave the world unseen,
And with thee fade away into the forest dim:

Fade far away, dissolve, and quite forget
What thou among the leaves hast never known,
The weariness, the fever, and the fret
Here, where men sit and hear each other groan;
Where palsy shakes a few, sad, last gray hairs,
Where youth grows pale, and specter-thin, and dies;
Where but to think is to be full of sorrow
And leaden-eyed despairs;
Where Beauty cannot keep her lustrous eyes,
Or new Love pine at them beyond to-morrow.

Away! away! for I will fly to thee,
Not charioted by Bacchus and his pards,
But on the viewless wings of Poesy,
Though the dull brain perplexes and retards:
Already with thee! tender is the night,
And haply the Queen-Moon is on her throne,
Cluster'd around by all her starry Fays;
But here there is no light,
Save what from heaven is with the breezes blown
Through verdurous glooms and winding mossy ways.

I cannot see what flowers are at my feet,
Nor what soft incense hangs upon the boughs,
But, in embalméd darkness, guess each sweet
Wherewith the seasonable month endows
The grass, the thicket, and the fruit-tree wild;
White hawthorn, and the pastoral eglantine;
Fast fading violets cover'd up in leaves;
And mid-May's eldest child,
The coming musk-rose, full of dewy wine,
The murmurous haunt of flies on summer eves.

Darkling I listen; and for many a time
I have been half in love with easeful Death,
Call'd him soft names in many a muséd rhyme,
To take into the air my quiet breath;
Now more than ever seems it rich to die,
To cease upon the midnight with no pain,
While thou art pouring forth thy soul abroad
In such an ecstasy!
Still wouldst thou sing, and I have ears in vain —
To thy high requiem become a sod.

Thou wast not born for death, immortal Bird!
No hungry generations tread thee down;
The voice I hear this passing night was heard
In ancient days by emperor and clown:
Perhaps the selfsame song that found a path
Through the sad heart of Ruth, when, sick for home,
She stood in tears amid the alien corn;
The same that ofttimes hath
Charm'd magic casements, opening on the foam
Of perilous seas, in faery lands forlorn.

Forlorn! the very word is like a bell
To toll me back from thee to my sole self!
Adieu! the fancy cannot cheat so well
As she is famed to do, deceiving self.
Adieu! adieu! thy plaintive anthem fades
Past the near meadows, over the still stream,
Up the hillside; and now 'tis buried deep
In the next valley glades:
Was it a vision, or a waking dream?
Fled is that music: — Do I wake or sleep?

J. Keats

291

UPON WESTMINSTER BRIDGE, SEPT. 3, 1802

Earth has not anything to show more fair:
Dull would he be of soul who could pass by
A sight so touching in its majesty:
This City now doth like a garment wear

The beauty of the morning; silent, bare,
Ships, towers, domes, theaters, and temples lie
Open unto the fields, and to the sky, —
All bright and glittering in the smokeless air.

Never did sun more beautifully steep
In his first splendor valley, rock, or hill;
Ne'er saw I, never felt, a calm so deep!

The river glideth at its own sweet will:
Dear God! the very houses seem asleep;
And all that mighty heart is lying still!

W. Wordsworth

292

To one who has been long in city pent,
'Tis very sweet to look into the fair
And open face of heaven, — to breathe a prayer
Full in the smile of the blue firmament.

Who is more happy, when, with heart's content,
Fatigued he sinks into some pleasant lair
Of wavy grass, and reads a debonair
And gentle tale of love and languishment?

Returning home at evening, with an ear
Catching the notes of Philomel, — an eye
Watching the sailing cloudlet's bright career,

He mourns that day so soon has glided by:
E'en like the passage of an angel's tear
That falls through the clear ether silently.

J. Keats

293

OZYMANDIAS OF EGYPT

I met a traveler from an antique land
Who said: Two vast and trunkless legs of stone
Stand in the desert. Near them on the sand,
Half sunk, a shatter'd visage lies, whose frown

And wrinkled lip and sneer of cold command
Tell that its sculptor well those passions read
Which yet survive, stamp'd on these lifeless things,
The hand that mock'd them and the heart that fed;
And on the pedestal these words appear:
"My name is Ozymandias, king of kings:
Look on my works, ye Mighty, and despair!"
Nothing beside remains. Round the decay
Of that colossal wreck, boundless and bare,
The lone and level sands stretch far away.

P. B. Shelley

294

COMPOSED AT NEIDPATH CASTLE THE PROPERTY OF LORD QUEENSBERRY, 1803

Degenerate Douglas! oh, the unworthy lord!
Whom mere despite of heart could so far please
And love of havoc (for with such disease
Fame taxes him), that he could send forth word

To level with the dust a noble horde,
A brotherhood of venerable trees,
Leaving an ancient dome, and towers like these,
Beggar'd and outraged! — Many hearts deplored

The fate of those old trees; and oft with pain
The traveler at this day will stop and gaze
On wrongs, which Nature scarcely seems to heed:

For shelter'd places, bosoms, nooks, and bays,
And the pure mountains, and the gentle Tweed,
And the green silent pastures, yet remain.

W. Wordsworth

295

THE BEECH TREE'S PETITION

O leave this barren spot to me!
Spare, woodman, spare the beechen tree!

Though bush or floweret never grow
My dark unwarming shade below;
Nor summer bud perfume the dew
Of rosy blush, or yellow hue;
Nor fruits of autumn, blossom-born,
My green and glossy leaves adorn;
Nor murmuring tribes from me derive
Th' ambrosial amber of the hive;
Yet leave this barren spot to me:
Spare, woodman, spare the beechen tree!

Thrice twenty summers I have seen
The sky grow bright, the forest green;
And many a wintry wind have stood
In bloomless, fruitless solitude,
Since childhood in my pleasant bower
First spent its sweet and sportive hour;
Since youthful lovers in my shade
Their vows of truth and rapture made,
And on my trunk's surviving frame
Carved many a long-forgotten name.
Oh! by the sighs of gentle sound,
First breathed upon this sacred ground;
By all that Love has whisper'd here,
Or Beauty heard with ravish'd ear;
As Love's own altar honor me:
Spare, woodman, spare the beechen tree!

T. Campbell

296

ADMONITION TO A TRAVELER

Yes, there is holy pleasure in thine eye!
— The lovely Cottage in the guardian nook
Hath stirr'd thee deeply; with its own dear brook,
Its own small pasture, almost its own sky!

But covet not the abode; forbear to sigh
As many do, repining while they look;
Intruders — who would tear from Nature's book
This precious leaf with harsh impiety.

— Think what the home must be if it were thine,
Even thine, though few thy wants! — Roof, window, door,
The very flowers are sacred to the Poor,

The roses to the porch which they entwine:
Yea, all that now enchants thee, from the day
On which it should be touch'd, would melt away!

W. Wordsworth

297

TO THE HIGHLAND GIRL OF INVERSNEYDE

Sweet Highland Girl, a very shower
Of beauty is thy earthly dower!
Twice seven consenting years have shed
Their utmost bounty on thy head:
And these gray rocks, that household lawn,
Those trees — a veil just half withdrawn,
This fall of water that doth make
A murmur near the silent lake,
This little bay, a quiet road
That holds in shelter thy abode;
In truth together ye do seem
Like something fashion'd in a dream;
Such forms as from their covert peep
When earthly cares are laid asleep!
But O fair Creature! in the light
Of common day, so heavenly bright,
I bless Thee, Vision as thou art,
I bless thee with a human heart:
God shield thee to thy latest years!
Thee neither know I nor thy peers:
And yet my eyes are fill'd with tears.

With earnest feeling I shall pray
For thee when I am far away;
For never saw I mien or face
In which more plainly I could trace
Benignity and home-bred sense
Ripening in perfect innocence.

Here scatter'd, like a random seed,
Remote from men, Thou dost not need
The embarrass'd look of shy distress,
And maidenly shamefacédness:
Thou wear'st upon thy forehead clear
The freedom of a Mountaineer:
A face with gladness overspread;
Soft smiles, by human kindness bred;
And seemliness complete, that sways
Thy courtesies, about thee plays;
With no restraint, but such as springs
From quick and eager visitings
Of thoughts that lie beyond the reach
Of thy few words of English speech:
A bondage sweetly brook'd, a strife
That gives thy gestures grace and life!
So have I, not unmoved in mind,
Seen birds of tempest-loving kind —
Thus beating up against the wind.

What hand but would a garland cull
For thee who art so beautiful?
O happy pleasure! here to dwell
Beside thee in some heathy dell;
Adopt your homely ways, and dress,
A shepherd, thou a shepherdess!
But I could frame a wish for thee
More like a grave reality:
Thou art to me but as a wave
Of the wild sea: and I would have
Some claim upon thee, if I could,
Though but of common neighborhood.
What joy to hear thee, and to see!
Thy elder brother I would be,
Thy father — anything to thee.

Now thanks to Heaven! that of its grace
Hath led me to this lonely place:
Joy have I had, and going hence
I bear away my recompense.

In spots like these it is we prize
Our Memory, feel that she hath eyes:
Then why should I be loath to stir?
I feel this place was made for her;
To give new pleasure like the past,
Continued long as life shall last.
Nor am I loth, though pleased at heart,
Sweet Highland Girl! from thee to part;
For I, methinks, till I grow old
As fair before me shall behold
As I do now, the cabin small,
The lake, the bay, the waterfall;
And Thee, the Spirit of them all!

W. Wordsworth

298

THE REAPER

Behold her, single in the field,
Yon solitary Highland Lass!
Reaping and singing by herself;
Stop here, or gently pass!
Alone she cuts and binds the grain,
And sings a melancholy strain;
O listen! for the vale profound
Is overflowing with the sound.

No nightingale did ever chaunt
More welcome notes to weary bands
Of travelers in some shady haunt,
Among Arabian sands:
A voice so thrilling ne'er was heard
In springtime from the cuckoo bird,
Breaking the silence of the seas
Among the farthest Hebrides.

Will no one tell me what she sings?
Perhaps the plaintive numbers flow
For old, unhappy far-off things,
And battles long ago:

Or is it some more humble lay,
Familiar matter of to-day?
Some natural sorrow, loss, or pain,
That has been, and may be again!

Whate'er the theme, the maiden sang
As if her song could have no ending;
I saw her singing at her work,
And o'er the sickle bending —
I listen'd, motionless and still;
And, as I mounted up the hill,
The music in my heart I bore
Long after it was heard no more.

W. Wordsworth

299

THE REVERIE OF POOR SUSAN

At the corner of Wood Street, when daylight appears,
Hangs a Thrush that sings loud, it has sung for three years:
Poor Susan has pass'd by the spot, and has heard
In the silence of morning the song of the bird.

'Tis a note of enchantment; what ails her? She sees
A mountain ascending, a vision of trees;
Bright volumes of vapor through Lothbury glide,
And a river flows on through the vale of Cheapside.

Green pastures she views in the midst of the dale
Down which she so often has tripp'd with her pail;
And a single small cottage, a nest like a dove's,
The one only dwelling on earth that she loves.

She looks, and her heart is in heaven: but they fade,
The mist and the river, the hill and the shade;
The stream will not flow, and the hill will not rise,
And the colors have all pass'd away from her eyes!

W. Wordsworth

300

TO A LADY, WITH A GUITAR

Ariel to Miranda: — Take
This slave of music, for the sake
Of him, who is the slave of thee;
And teach it all the harmony
In which thou canst, and only thou,
Make the delighted spirit glow,
Till joy denies itself again
And, too intense, is turn'd to pain.
For by permission and command
Of thine own Prince Ferdinand,
Poor Ariel sends this silent token
Of more than ever can be spoken;
Your guardian spirit, Ariel, who
From life to life must still pursue
Your happiness, for thus alone
Can Ariel ever find his own.
From Prospero's enchanted cell,
As the mighty verses tell,
To the throne of Naples he
Lit you o'er the trackless sea,
Flitting on, your prow before,
Like a living meteor.
When you die, the silent Moon
In her interlunar swoon
Is not sadder in her cell
Than deserted Ariel: —
When you live again on earth,
Like an unseen Star of birth
Ariel guides you o'er the sea
Of life from your nativity: —
Many changes have been run
Since Ferdinand and you begun
Your course of love, and Ariel still Has track'd your steps and served your will.
Now in humbler, happier lot,
This is all remember'd not;
And now, alas! the poor Sprite is Imprison'd for some fault of his

In a body like a grave —
From you he only dares to crave,
For his service and his sorrow
A smile to-day, a song to-morrow.

The artist who this idol wrought
To echo all harmonious thought,
Fell'd a tree, while on the steep
The woods were in their winter sleep,
Rock'd in that repose divine
On the wind-swept Apennine;
And dreaming, some of Autumn past,
And some of Spring approaching fast,
And some of April buds and showers,
And some of songs in July bowers,
And all of love: And so this tree, —
Oh that such our death may be! —
Died in sleep, and felt no pain,
To live in happier form again:
From which, beneath heaven's fairest star,
The artist wrought this loved Guitar;
And taught it justly to reply
To all who question skillfully
In language gentle as thine own;
Whispering in enamor'd tone
Sweet oracles of woods and dells,
And summer winds in sylvan cells:
— For it had learned all harmonies
Of the plains and of the skies,
Of the forests and the mountains,
And the many-voicéd fountains;
The clearest echoes of the hills,
The softest notes of falling rills,
The melodies of birds and bees,
The murmuring of summer seas,
And pattering rain, and breathing dew,
And airs of evening; and it knew
That seldom-heard mysterious sound
Which, driven on its diurnal round,

As it floats through boundless day,
Our world enkindles on its way:
— All this it knows, but will not tell
To those who cannot question well
The Spirit that inhabits it;
It talks according to the wit
Of its companions; and no more
Is heard than has been felt before
By those who tempt it to betray
These secrets of an elder day.
But, sweetly as its answers will
Flatter hands of perfect skill,
It keeps its highest holiest tone
For our beloved Friend alone.

P. B. Shelley

301

THE DAFFODILS

I wander'd lonely as a cloud
That floats on high o'er vales and hills,
When all at once I saw a crowd,
A host of golden daffodils,
Beside the lake, beneath the trees,
Fluttering and dancing in the breeze.

Continuous as the stars that shine
And twinkle on the milky way,
They stretch'd in never-ending line
Along the margin of a bay:
Ten thousand saw I at a glance
Tossing their heads in sprightly dance.

The waves beside them danced, but they
Outdid the sparkling waves in glee: —
A Poet could not but be gay
In such a jocund company!
I gazed — and gazed — but little thought
What wealth the show to me had brought;

For oft, when on my couch I lie
In vacant or in pensive mood,
They flash upon that inward eye
Which is the bliss of solitude;
And then my heart with pleasure fills,
And dances with the daffodils.

W. Wordsworth

302

TO THE DAISY

With little here to do or see
Of things that in the great world be,
Sweet Daisy! oft I talk to thee
For thou art worthy,
Thou unassuming Commonplace
Of Nature, with that homely face,
And yet with something of a grace
Which Love makes for thee!

Oft on the dappled turf at ease
I sit and play with similes,
Loose types of things through all degrees,
Thoughts of thy raising;
And many a fond and idle name
I give to thee, for praise or blame
As is the humor of the game,
While I am gazing.

A nun demure, of lowly port;
Or sprightly maiden, of Love's court,
In thy simplicity the sport
Of all temptations;
A queen in crown of rubies drest;
A starveling in a scanty vest;
Are all, as seems to suit thee best,
Thy appellations.

A little Cyclops, with one eye
Staring to threaten and defy,

That thought comes next — and instantly
The freak is over,
The shape will vanish, and behold!
A silver shield with boss of gold
That spreads itself, some faery bold
In fight to cover.

I see thee glittering from afar —
And then thou art a pretty star,
Not quite so fair as many are
In heaven above thee!
Yet like a star, with glittering crest,
Self-poised in air thou seem'st to rest; —
May peace come never to his nest
Who shall reprove thee!

Sweet Flower! for by that name at last
When all my reveries are past
I call thee, and to that cleave fast,
Sweet silent Creature!
That breath'st with me in sun and air,
Do thou, as thou art wont, repair
My heart with gladness, and a share
Of thy meek nature!

W. Wordsworth

303
ODE TO AUTUMN

Season of mists and mellow fruitfulness,
Close bosom friend of the maturing sun;
Conspiring with him how to load and bless
With fruit the vines that round the thatch eaves run;
To bend with apples the moss'd cottage trees,
And fill all fruit with ripeness to the core;
To swell the gourd, and plump the hazel shells
With a sweet kernel; to set budding more,
And still more, later flowers for the bees,
Until they think warm days will never cease;
For Summer has o'erbrimm'd their clammy cells.

Who hath not seen thee oft amid thy store?
Sometimes whoever seeks abroad may find
Thee sitting careless on a granary floor,
Thy hair soft-lifted by the winnowing wind;
Or on a half-reap'd furrow sound asleep,
Drowsed with the fume of poppies, while thy hook
Spares the next swath and all its twinéd flowers:
And sometimes like a gleaner thou dost keep
Steady thy laden head across a brook;
Or by a cider-press, with patient look,
Thou watchest the last oozings, hours by hours.

Where are the songs of Spring? Aye, where are they?
Think not of them, thou hast thy music too, —
While barréd clouds bloom the soft-dying day
And touch the stubble-plains with rosy hue;
Then in a wailful choir the small gnats mourn
Among the river sallows, borne aloft
Or sinking as the light wind lives or dies;
And full-grown lambs loud bleat from hilly bourn;
Hedge crickets sing; and now with treble soft
The redbreast whistles from a garden croft;
And gathering swallows twitter in the skies.

J. Keats

304

ODE TO WINTER

GERMANY, DECEMBER, 1800

When first the fiery-mantled Sun
His heavenly race began to run,
Round the earth and ocean blue
His children four the Seasons flew.
First, in green apparel dancing,
The young Spring smiled with angel grace;
Rosy Summer next advancing,
Rush'd into her sire's embrace —
Her bright-hair'd sire, who bade her keep Forever nearest to his smiles,

On Calpe's olive-shaded steep
  Or India's citron-cover'd isles:
More remote, and buxom-brown,
  The Queen of vintage bow'd before his throne;
A rich pomegranate gemm'd her crown,
  A ripe sheaf bound her zone.

But howling Winter fled afar
To hills that prop the polar star;
And loves on deer-borne car to ride
With barren darkness by his side,
Round the shore where loud Lofoden
  Whirls to death the roaring whale,
Round the hall where Runic Odin
  Howls his war song to the gale;
Save when adown the ravaged globe
  He travels on his native storm,
Deflowering Nature's grassy robe
  And trampling on her faded form: —
Till light's returning Lord assume
  The shaft that drives him to his polar field,
Of power to pierce his raven plume
  And crystal-cover'd shield.

Oh, sire of storms! whose savage ear
The Lapland drum delights to hear,
When Frenzy with her bloodshot eye
Implores thy dreadful deity —
Archangel! Power of desolation!
  Fast descending as thou art,
Say, hath mortal invocation
  Spells to touch thy stony heart?
Then, sullen Winter! hear my prayer,
And gently rule the ruin'd year;
Nor chill the wanderer's bosom bare
Nor freeze the wretch's falling tear:
To shuddering Want's unmantled bed
  Thy horror-breathing agues cease to lend,
And gently on the orphan head
  Of Innocence descend.

But chiefly spare, O king of clouds!
The sailor on his airy shrouds,
When wrecks and beacons strew the steep,
And specters walk along the deep.
Milder yet thy snowy breezes
Pour on yonder tented shores,
Where the Rhine's broad billow freezes,
Or the dark-brown Danube roars.
Oh, winds of Winter! list ye there
To many a deep and dying groan?
Or start, ye demons of the midnight air,
At shrieks and thunders louder than your own?
Alas! ev'n your unhallow'd breath
May spare the victim fallen low;
But Man will ask no truce to death, —
No bounds to human woe.

T. Campbell

305
YARROW UNVISITED, 1803

From Stirling Castle we had seen
The mazy Forth unravel'd,
Had trod the banks of Clyde and Tay
And with the Tweed had travel'd;
And when we came to Clovenford,
Then said my "winsome Marrow,"
"Whate'er betide, we'll turn aside,
And see the Braes of Yarrow."

"Let Yarrow folk, frae Selkirk town,
Who have been buying, selling,
Go back to Yarrow, 'tis their own,
Each maiden to her dwelling!
On Yarrow's banks let herons feed,
Hares couch, and rabbits burrow;
But we will downward with the Tweed,
Nor turn aside to Yarrow.

"There's Gala Water, Leader Haughs,
Both lying right before us;

And Dryburgh, where with chiming Tweed
The lintwhites sing in chorus;
There's pleasant Tiviot-dale, a land
Made blithe with plow and harrow:
Why throw away a needful day
To go in search of Yarrow?

"What's Yarrow but a river bare
That glides the dark hills under?
There are a thousand such elsewhere
As worthy of your wonder."
— Strange words they seem'd of slight and scorn;
My True-love sigh'd for sorrow,
And look'd me in the face, to think,
I thus could speak of Yarrow!

"O green," said I, "are Yarrow's holms,
And sweet is Yarrow flowing!
Fair hangs the apple frae the rock,
But we will leave it growing.
O'er hilly path and open strath
We'll wander Scotland thorough;
But, though so near, we will not turn
Into the dales of Yarrow.

"Let beeves and home-bred kine partake
The sweets of Burn-mill meadow;
The swan on still Saint Mary's Lake
Float double, swan and shadow!
We will not see them; will not go
To-day, nor yet to-morrow;
Enough if in our hearts we know
There's such a place as Yarrow.

"Be Yarrow stream unseen, unknown!
It must, or we shall rue it:
We have a vision of our own,
Ah! why should we undo it?
The treasured dreams of times long past,
We'll keep them, winsome Marrow!

For when we're there, although 'tis fair,
'Twill be another Yarrow!

"If Care with freezing years should come
And wandering seem but folly, —
Should we be loath to stir from home,
And yet be melancholy;
Should life be dull, and spirits low,
'Twill soothe us in our sorrow
That earth has something yet to show,
The bonny holms of Yarrow!"

W. Wordsworth

306
YARROW VISITED

SEPTEMBER, 1814

And is this — Yarrow? — This the stream
Of which my fancy cherish'd
So faithfully, a waking dream,
An image that hath perish'd?
O that some minstrel's harp were near
To utter notes of gladness
And chase this silence from the air,
That fills my heart with sadness!

Yet why? — a silvery current flows
With uncontroll'd meanderings;
Nor have these eyes by greener hills
Been soothed, in all my wanderings.
And, through her depths, Saint Mary's Lake
Is visibly delighted;
For not a feature of those hills
Is in the mirror slighted.

A blue sky bends o'er Yarrow Vale,
Save where that pearly whiteness
Is round the rising sun diffused,
A tender hazy brightness;

Mild dawn of promise! that excludes
All profitless dejection;
Though not unwilling here to admit
A pensive recollection.

Where was it that the famous Flower
Of Yarrow Vale lay bleeding?
His bed perchance was yon smooth mound
On which the herd is feeding:
And haply from this crystal pool,
Now peaceful as the morning,
The Water Wraith ascended thrice,
And gave his doleful warning.

Delicious is the lay that sings
The haunts of happy lovers,
The path that leads them to the grove,
The leafy grove that covers:
And pity sanctifies the verse
That paints, by strength of sorrow,
The unconquerable strength of love;
Bear witness, rueful Yarrow!

But thou that didst appear so fair
To fond imagination,
Dost rival in the light of day
Her delicate creation:
Meek loveliness is round thee spread,
A softness still and holy:
The grace of forest charms decay'd,
And pastoral melancholy.

That region left, the vale unfolds
Rich groves of lofty stature,
With Yarrow winding through the pomp
Of cultivated nature;
And rising from those lofty groves
Behold a ruin hoary,
The shatter'd front of Newark's towers,
Renown'd in Border story.

Fair scenes for childhood's opening bloom,
For sportive youth to stray in,
For manhood to enjoy his strength,
And age to wear away in!
Yon cottage seems a bower of bliss,
A covert for protection
Of tender thoughts that nestle there —
The brood of chaste affection.

How sweet on this autumnal day
The wildwood fruits to gather,
And on my True-love's forehead plant
A crest of blooming heather!
And what if I enwreathed my own?
'Twere no offense to reason;
The sober hills thus deck their brows
To meet the wintry season.

I see — but not by sight alone,
Loved Yarrow, have I won thee;
A ray of Fancy still survives —
Her sunshine plays upon thee!
Thy ever-youthful waters keep
A course of lively pleasure;
And gladsome notes my lips can breathe
Accordant to the measure.

The vapors linger round the heights,
They melt, and soon must vanish;
One hour is theirs, nor more is mine —
Sad thought! which I would banish,
But that I know, where'er I go,
Thy genuine image, Yarrow!
Will dwell with me, to heighten joy,
And cheer my mind in sorrow.

W. Wordsworth

307
THE INVITATION

Best and brightest, come away, —
Fairer far than this fair Day,
Which, like thee, to those in sorrow
Comes to bid a sweet good morrow
To the rough year just awake
In its cradle on the brake.
The brightest hour of unborn Spring
Through the winter wandering,
Found, it seems, the halcyon morn
To hoar February born;
Bending from heaven, in azure mirth,
It kiss'd the forehead of the earth,
And smiled upon the silent sea,
And bade the frozen streams be free,
And waked to music all their fountains.
And breathed upon the frozen mountains,
And like a prophetess of May
Strew'd flowers upon the barren way,
Making the wintry world appear
Like one on whom thou smilest, dear.

Away, away, from men and towns,
To the wildwood and the downs —
To the silent wilderness
Where the soul need not repress
Its music, lest it should not find
An echo in another's mind,
While the touch of Nature's art
Harmonizes heart to heart.

Radiant Sister of the Day,
Awake! arise! and come away!
To the wildwoods and the plains,
To the pools where winter rains
Image all their roof of leaves,
Where the pine its garland weaves
Of sapless green, and ivy dun,

Round stems that never kiss the sun;
Where the lawns and pastures be
And the sandhills of the sea;
Where the melting hoarfrost wets
The daisy star that never sets,
And windflowers and violets
Which yet join not scent to hue
Crown the pale year weak and new;
When the night is left behind
In the deep east, dim and blind,
And the blue moon is over us,
And the multitudinous
Billows murmur at our feet,
Where the earth and ocean meet,
And all things seem only one
In the universal Sun.

P. B. Shelley

308

THE RECOLLECTION

Now the last day of many days
All beautiful and bright as thou,
The loveliest and the last, is dead:
Rise, Memory, and write its praise!
Up — to thy wonted work! come, trace
The epitaph of glory fled,
For now the earth has changed its face,
A frown is on the heaven's brow.

We wander'd to the Pine Forest
That skirts the Ocean's foam;
The lightest wind was in its nest,
The tempest in its home.
The whispering waves were half asleep,
The clouds were gone to play,
And on the bosom of the deep
The smile of heaven lay;
It seem'd as if the hour were one
Sent from beyond the skies

Which scatter'd from above the sun
A light of Paradise!

We paused amid the pines that stood
The giants of the waste,
Tortured by storms to shapes as rude
As serpents interlaced, —
And soothed by every azure breath
That under heaven is blown,
To harmonies and hues beneath,
As tender as its own:
Now all the treetops lay asleep
Like green waves on the sea,
As still as in the silent deep
The ocean woods may be.

How calm it was! — The silence there
By such a chain was bound,
That even the busy woodpecker
Made stiller with her sound
The inviolable quietness;
The breath of peace we drew
With its soft motion made not less
The calm that round us grew.
There seem'd, from the remotest seat
Of the white mountain waste
To the soft flower beneath our feet,
A magic circle traced, —
A spirit interfused around,
A thrilling silent life;
To momentary peace it bound
Our mortal nature's strife; —
And still I felt the center of
The magic circle there
Was one fair form that fill'd with love
The lifeless atmosphere.

We paused beside the pools that lie
Under the forest bough;
Each seem'd as 'twere a little sky
Gulf'd in a world below;

A firmament of purple light
Which in the dark earth lay,
More boundless than the depth of night
And purer than the day —
In which the lovely forests grew
As in the upper air,
More perfect both in shape and hue
Than any spreading there.
There lay the glade and neighboring lawn,
And through the dark-green wood
The white sun twinkling like the dawn
Out of a speckled cloud.
Sweet views which in our world above
Can never well be seen
Were imaged in the water's love
Of that fair forest green:
And all was interfused beneath
With an Elysian glow,
An atmosphere without a breath,
A softer day below.
Like one beloved, the scene had lent
To the dark water's breast
Its every leaf and lineament
With more than truth exprest;
Until an envious wind crept by,
Like an unwelcome thought
Which from the mind's too faithful eye
Blots one dear image out.
— Though thou art ever fair and kind,
The forests ever green,
Less oft is peace in Shelley's mind
Than calm in waters seen!

P. B. Shelley

309
BY THE SEA

It is a beauteous evening, calm and free;
The holy time is quiet as a Nun

Breathless with adoration; the broad sun
Is sinking down in its tranquillity;

The gentleness of heaven is on the Sea:
Listen! the mighty Being is awake,
And doth with his eternal motion make
A sound like thunder — everlastingly.

Dear child! dear girl! that walkest with me here,
If thou appear untouch'd by solemn thought
Thy nature is not therefore less divine:

Thou liest in Abraham's bosom all the year,
And worship'st at the Temple's inner shrine,
God being with thee when we know it not.

W. Wordsworth

310

SONG TO THE EVENING STAR

Star that bringest home the bee,
And sett'st the weary laborer free!
If any star shed peace, 'tis Thou
That send'st it from above,
Appearing when Heaven's breath and brow
Are sweet as hers we love.

Come to the luxuriant skies,
Whilst the landscape's odors rise,
Whilst far-off lowing herds are heard
And songs when toil is done,
From cottages whose smoke unstirr'd
Curls yellow in the sun.

Star of love's soft interviews,
Parted lovers on thee muse:
Their remembrancer in Heaven
Of thrilling vows thou art,
Too delicious to be riven
By absence from the heart.

T. Campbell

311

DATUR HORA QUIETI

The sun upon the lake is low,
The wild birds hush their song,
The hills have evening's deepest glow,
Yet Leonard tarries long.
Now all whom varied toil and care
From home and love divide,
In the calm sunset may repair
Each to the loved one's side.

The noble dame, on turret high,
Who waits her gallant knight,
Looks to the western beam to spy
The flash of armor bright.
The village maid, with hand on brow
The level ray to shade,
Upon the footpath watches now
For Colin's darkening plaid.

Now to their mates the wild swans row,
By day they swam apart,
And to the thicket wanders slow
The hind beside the hart.
The woodlark at his partner's side
Twitters his closing song —
All meet whom day and care divide,
But Leonard tarries long!

Sir W. Scott

312

TO THE MOON

Art thou pale for weariness
Of climbing heaven, and gazing on the earth,
Wandering companionless
Among the stars that have a different birth, —
And ever-changing, like a joyless eye
That finds no object worth its constancy?

P. B. Shelley

313
TO SLEEP

A flock of sheep that leisurely pass by
One after one; the sound of rain, and bees
Murmuring; the fall of rivers, winds, and seas,
Smooth fields, white sheets of water, and pure sky;

I've thought of all by turns, and yet do lie
Sleepless; and soon the small birds' melodies
Must hear, first utter'd from my orchard trees,
And the first cuckoo's melancholy cry.

Even thus last night, and two nights more I lay,
And could not win thee, Sleep! by any stealth:
So do not let me wear to-night away:

Without Thee what is all the morning's wealth?
Come, blessèd barrier between day and day,
Dear mother of fresh thoughts and joyous health!

W. Wordsworth

314
THE SOLDIER'S DREAM

Our bugles sang truce, for the night cloud had lower'd,
And the sentinel stars set their watch in the sky;
And thousands had sunk on the ground overpower'd,
The weary to sleep, and the wounded to die.

When reposing that night on my pallet of straw
By the wolf-scaring fagot that guarded the slain,
At the dead of the night a sweet Vision I saw;
And thrice ere the morning I dreamed it again.

Methought from the battle-field's dreadful array
Far, far, I had roam'd on a desolate track:
'Twas Autumn, — and sunshine arose on the way
To the home of my fathers, that welcomed me back.

I flew to the pleasant fields traversed so oft
In life's morning march, when my bosom was young;
I heard my own mountain goats bleating aloft,
And knew the sweet strain that the corn reapers sung.

Then pledged we the wine cup, and fondly I swore
From my home and my weeping friends never to part;
My little ones kiss'd me a thousand times o'er,
And my wife sobb'd aloud in her fullness of heart.

"Stay — stay with us! — rest! — thou art weary and worn!" —
And fain was their war-broken soldier to stay; —
But sorrow return'd with the dawning of morn,
And the voice in my dreaming ear melted away.

T. Campbell

315

A DREAM OF THE UNKNOWN

I dream'd that as I wander'd by the way
Bare Winter suddenly was changed to Spring,
And gentle odors led my steps astray,
Mix'd with a sound of waters murmuring
Along a shelving bank of turf, which lay
Under a copse, and hardly dared to fling
Its green arms round the bosom of the stream,
But kiss'd it and then fled, as Thou mightest in dream.

There grew pied windflowers and violets,
Daisies, those pearl'd Arcturi of the earth,
The constellated flower that never sets;
Faint oxlips; tender bluebells, at whose birth
The sod scarce heaved; and that tall flower that wets —
Like a child, half in tenderness and mirth —
Its mother's face with heaven-collected tears,
When the low wind, its playmate's voice, it hears.

And in the warm hedge grew lush eglantine,
Green cow-bind and the moonlight-color'd May,

And cherry blossoms, and white cups, whose wine
  Was the bright dew yet drain'd not by the day;
And wild roses, and ivy serpentine
  With its dark buds and leaves, wandering astray;
And flowers azure, black, and streak'd with gold,
Fairer than any waken'd eyes behold.

And nearer to the river's trembling edge
  There grew broad flag-flowers, purple prank'd with white,
And starry river buds among the sedge,
  And floating water lilies, broad and bright,
Which lit the oak that overhung the hedge
  With moonlight beams of their own watery light;
And bulrushes, and reeds of such deep green
As soothed the dazzled eye with sober sheen.

Methought that of these visionary flowers
  I made a nosegay, bound in such a way
That the same hues, which in their natural bowers
  Were mingled or opposed, the like array
Kept these imprison'd children of the Hours
  Within my hand, — and then, elate and gay,
I hasten'd to the spot whence I had come
That I might there present it — O! to Whom?

P. B. Shelley

316
KUBLA KHAN

In Xanadu did Kubla Khan
A stately pleasure-dome decree:
Where Alph, the sacred river, ran
Through caverns measureless to man
  Down to a sunless sea.
So twice five miles of fertile ground
With walls and towers were girdled round:
And there were gardens bright with sinuous rills
Where blossom'd many an incense-bearing tree;
And here were forests ancient as the hills,
Enfolding sunny spots of greenery.

But oh! that deep romantic chasm which slanted
Down the green hill athwart a cedarn cover!
A savage place! as holy and enchanted
As e'er beneath a waning moon was haunted
By woman wailing for her demon-lover!
And from this chasm, with ceaseless turmoil seething,
As if this earth in fast thick pants were breathing,
A mighty fountain momently was forced:
Amid whose swift half-intermitted burst
Huge fragments vaulted like rebounding hail,
Or chaffy grain beneath the thresher's flail:
And mid these dancing rocks at once and ever
It flung up momently the sacred river.
Five miles meandering with a mazy motion
Through wood and dale the sacred river ran,
Then reach'd the caverns measureless to man,
And sank in tumult to a lifeless ocean:
And 'mid this tumult Kubla heard from far
Ancestral voices prophesying war!

The shadow of the dome of pleasure
Floated midway on the waves;
Where was heard the mingled measure
From the fountain and the caves.
It was a miracle of rare device,
A sunny pleasure dome with caves of ice!
A damsel with a dulcimer
In a vision once I saw:
It was an Abyssinian maid,
And on her dulcimer she play'd,
Singing of Mount Abora.
Could I revive within me
Her symphony and song,
To such a deep delight 'twould win me
That with music loud and long,
I would build that dome in air,
That sunny dome! those caves of ice!
And all who heard should see them there,
And all should cry, Beware! Beware!
His flashing eyes, his floating hair!

Weave a circle round him thrice,
And close your eyes with holy dread,
For he on honeydew hath fed,
And drunk the milk of Paradise.

S. T. Coleridge

317
THE INNER VISION

Most sweet it is with unuplifted eyes
To pace the ground, if path be there or none,
While a fair region round the traveler lies
Which he forbears again to look upon;

Pleased rather with some soft ideal scene,
The work of Fancy, or some happy tone
Of meditation, slipping in between
The beauty coming and the beauty gone.

— If Thought and Love desert us, from that day
Let us break off all commerce with the Muse:
With Thought and Love companions of our way —

Whate'er the senses take or may refuse, —
The Mind's internal heaven shall shed her dews
Of inspiration on the humblest lay.

W. Wordsworth

318
THE REALM OF FANCY

Ever let the Fancy roam;
Pleasure never is at home:
At a touch sweet Pleasure melteth,
Like to bubbles when rain pelteth;
Then let wingéd Fancy wander
Through the thought still spread beyond her:
Open wide the mind's cage door,
She'll dart forth, and cloudward soar.
O sweet Fancy! let her loose;

Summer's joys are spoiled by use,
And the enjoying of the Spring
Fades as does its blossoming;
Autumn's red-lipp'd fruitage too,
Blushing through the mist and dew,
Cloys with tasting: What do then?
Sit thee by the ingle, when
The sear fagot blazes bright,
Spirit of a winter's night;
When the soundless earth is muffled,
And the cakéd snow is shuffled
From the plowboy's heavy shoon;
When the Night doth meet the Noon
In a dark conspiracy
To banish Even from her sky.
Sit thee there, and send abroad,
With a mind self-overaw'd,
Fancy, high-commission'd: — send her!
She has vassals to attend her:
She will bring, in spite of frost,
Beauties that the earth hath lost;
She will bring thee, all together,
All delights of summer weather;
All the buds and bells of May,
From dewy sward or thorny spray;
All the heapéd Autumn's wealth,
With a still, mysterious stealth:
She will mix these pleasures up
Like three fit wines in a cup,
And thou shalt quaff it: — thou shalt hear
Distant harvest carols clear;
Rustle of the reapéd corn;
Sweet birds antheming the morn:
And, in the same moment — hark!
'Tis the early April lark,
Or the rooks, with busy caw,
Foraging for sticks and straw.
Thou shalt, at one glance, behold
The daisy and the marigold;
White-plumed lilies, and the first

Hedge-grown primrose that hath burst;
Shaded hyacinth, alway
Sapphire queen of the mid-May;
And every leaf, and every flower
Pearléd with the selfsame shower.
Thou shalt see the field mouse peep
Meager from its celléd sleep;
And the snake all winter-thin
Cast on sunny bank its skin;
Freckled nest eggs thou shalt see
Hatching in the hawthorn tree,
When the hen-bird's wing doth rest
Quiet on her mossy nest;
Then the hurry and alarm
When the beehive casts its swarm;
Acorns ripe down-pattering,
While the autumn breezes sing.

Oh, sweet Fancy! let her loose;
Everything is spoiled by use:
Where's the cheek that doth not fade,
Too much gazed at? Where's the maid
Whose lip mature is ever new?
Where's the eye, however blue,
Doth not weary? Where's the face
One would meet in every place?
Where's the voice, however soft,
One would hear so very oft?
At a touch sweet Pleasure melteth
Like to bubbles when rain pelteth.
Let then wingéd Fancy find
Thee a mistress to thy mind:
Dulcet-eyed as Ceres' daughter,
Ere the God of Torment taught her
How to frown and how to chide,
With a waist and with a side
White as Hebe's, when her zone
Slipped its golden clasp, and down
Fell her kirtle to her feet,
While she held the goblet sweet,

And Jove grew languid. — Break the mesh
Of the Fancy's silken leash;
Quickly break her prison-string,
And such joys as these she'll bring.
— Let the wingéd Fancy roam,
Pleasure never is at home.

J. Keats

319
WRITTEN IN EARLY SPRING

I heard a thousand blended notes
While in a grove I sate reclined,
In that sweet mood when pleasant thoughts
Bring sad thoughts to the mind.

To her fair works did Nature link
The human soul that through me ran;
And much it grieved my heart to think
What Man has made of Man.

Through primrose tufts, in that sweet bower,
The periwinkle trail'd its wreaths;
And 'tis my faith that every flower
Enjoys the air it breathes.

The birds around me hopp'd and play'd,
Their thoughts I cannot measure, —
But the least motion which they made
It seem'd a thrill of pleasure.

The budding twigs spread out their fan
To catch the breezy air;
And I must think, do all I can,
That there was pleasure there.

If this belief from heaven be sent,
If such be Nature's holy plan,
Have I not reason to lament
What Man has made of Man?

W. Wordsworth

320

RUTH: OR THE INFLUENCES OF NATURE

When Ruth was left half desolate
Her father took another mate;
And Ruth, not seven years old,
A slighted child, at her own will
Went wandering over dale and hill,
In thoughtless freedom, bold.

And she had made a pipe of straw,
And music from that pipe could draw
Like sounds of winds and floods;
Had built a bower upon the green,
As if she from her birth had been
An infant of the woods.

Beneath her father's roof, alone
She seem'd to live; her thoughts her own;
Herself her own delight:
Pleased with herself, nor sad nor gay;
And passing thus the livelong day,
She grew to woman's height.

There came a youth from Georgia's shore, —
A military casque he wore
With splendid feathers dressed;
He brought them from the Cherokees;
The feathers nodded in the breeze
And made a gallant crest.

From Indian blood you deem him sprung:
But no! he spake the English tongue
And bore a soldier's name;
And, when America was free
From battle and from jeopardy,
He 'cross the ocean came.

With hues of genius on his cheek,
In finest tones the youth could speak:
— While he was yet a boy

The moon, the glory of the sun,
And streams that murmur as they run
Had been his dearest joy.

He was a lovely youth! I guess
The panther in the wilderness
Was not so fair as he;
And when he chose to sport and play,
No dolphin ever was so gay
Upon the tropic sea.

Among the Indians he had fought;
And with him many tales he brought
Of pleasure and of fear;
Such tales as, told to any maid
By such a youth, in the green shade,
Were perilous to hear.

He told of girls, a happy rout!
Who quit their fold with dance and shout,
Their pleasant Indian town,
To gather strawberries all day long;
Returning with a choral song
When daylight is gone down.

He spake of plants that hourly change
Their blossoms, through a boundless range
Of intermingling hues;
With budding, fading, faded flowers,
They stand the wonder of the bowers
From morn to evening dews.

He told of the magnolia, spread
High as a cloud, high overhead!
The cypress and her spire;
— Of flowers that with one scarlet gleam
Cover a hundred leagues, and seem
To set the hills on fire.

The youth of green savannahs spake,
And many an endless, endless lake

With all its fairy crowds
Of islands, that together lie
As quietly as spots of sky
Among the evening clouds.

"How pleasant," then he said, "it were
A fisher or a hunter there,
In sunshine or in shade
To wander with an easy mind,
And build a household fire, and find
A home in every glade!

"What days and what bright years! Ah me!
Our life were life indeed, with thee
So pass'd in quiet bliss;
And all the while," said he, "to know
That we were in a world of woe,
On such an earth as this!"

And then he sometimes interwove
Fond thoughts about a father's love,
"For there," said he, "are spun
Around the heart such tender ties,
That our own children to our eyes
Are dearer than the sun.

"Sweet Ruth! and could you go with me
My helpmate in the woods to be,
Our shed at night to rear:
Or run, my own adopted bride,
A sylvan huntress at my side,
And drive the flying deer!

"Beloved Ruth!" — No more he said.
The wakeful Ruth at midnight shed
A solitary tear:
She thought again — and did agree
With him to sail across the sea.
And drive the flying deer.

"And now, as fitting is and right,
We in the church our faith will plight,
A husband and a wife."
Even so they did; and I may say
That to sweet Ruth that happy day
Was more than human life.

Through dream and vision did she sink,
Delighted all the while to think
That, on those lonesome floods
And green savannahs, she should share
His board with lawful joy, and bear
His name in the wild woods.

But, as you have before been told,
This Stripling, sportive, gay, and bold,
And with his dancing crest
So beautiful, through savage lands
Had roam'd about, with vagrant bands
Of Indians in the West.

The wind, the tempest roaring high,
The tumult of a tropic sky
Might well be dangerous food
For him, a youth to whom was given
So much of earth — so much of heaven,
And such impetuous blood.

Whatever in those climes he found
Irregular in sight or sound
Did to his mind impart
A kindred impulse, seem'd allied
To his own powers, and justified
The workings of his heart.

Nor less, to feed voluptuous thought,
The beauteous forms of Nature wrought, —
Fair trees and gorgeous flowers;
The breezes their own languor lent;

The stars had feelings, which they sent
Into those favor'd bowers.

Yet, in his worst pursuits, I ween
That sometimes there did intervene
Pure hopes of high intent:
For passions link'd to forms so fair
And stately, needs must have their share
Of noble sentiment.

But ill he lived, much evil saw,
With men to whom no better law
Nor better life was known;
Deliberately and undeceived
Those wild men's vices he received,
And gave them back his own.

His genius and his moral frame
Were thus impair'd, and he became
The slave of low desires:
A man who without self-control
Would seek what the degraded soul
Unworthily admires.

And yet he with no feign'd delight
Had woo'd the maiden, day and night
Had loved her, night and morn:
What could he less than love a maid
Whose heart with so much nature play'd —
So kind and so forlorn?

Sometimes most earnestly he said,
"O Ruth! I have been worse than dead;
False thoughts, thoughts bold and vain
Encompass'd me on every side
When I, in confidence and pride,
Had cross'd the Atlantic main.

"Before me shone a glorious world
Fresh as a banner bright, unfurl'd

To music suddenly:
I look'd upon those hills and plains,
And seem'd as if let loose from chains
To live at liberty!

"No more of this — for now, by thee,
Dear Ruth! more happily set free,
With nobler zeal I burn;
My soul from darkness is released
Like the whole sky when to the east
The morning doth return."

Full soon that better mind was gone;
No hope, no wish remain'd, not one, —
They stirr'd him now no more;
New objects did new pleasure give,
And once again he wish'd to live
As lawless as before.

Meanwhile, as thus with him it fared,
They for the voyage were prepared,
And went to the seashore:
But, when they thither came, the youth
Deserted his poor bride, and Ruth
Could never find him more.

God help thee, Ruth! — Such pains she had
That she in half a year was mad
And in a prison housed;
And there, with many a doleful song
Made of wild words, her cup of wrong
She fearfully caroused.

Yet sometimes milder hours she knew,
Nor wanted sun, nor rain, nor dew,
Nor pastimes of the May,
— They all were with her in her cell;
And a clear brook with cheerful knell
Did o'er the pebbles play.

When Ruth three seasons thus had lain,
There came a respite to her pain;
She from her prison fled;
But of the Vagrant none took thought;
And where it liked her best she sought
Her shelter and her bread.

Among the fields she breathed again:
The master-current of her brain
Ran permanent and free;
And, coming to the banks of Tone,
There did she rest; and dwell alone
Under the greenwood tree.

The engines of her pain, the tools
That shaped her sorrow, rocks and pools,
And airs that gently stir
The vernal leaves — she loved them still,
Nor ever tax'd them with the ill
Which had been done to her.

A barn her Winter bed supplies;
But, till the warmth of Summer skies
And Summer days is gone,
(And all do in this tale agree)
She sleeps beneath the greenwood tree,
And other home hath none.

An innocent life, yet far astray!
And Ruth will, long before her day,
Be broken down and old.
Sore aches she needs must have! but less
Of mind, than body's wretchedness,
From damp, and rain, and cold.

If she is pressed by want of food
She from her dwelling in the wood
Repairs to a roadside;
And there she begs at one steep place,
Where up and down with easy pace
The horsemen-travelers ride.

That oaten pipe of hers is mute
Or thrown away: but with a flute
Her loneliness she cheers;
This flute, made of a hemlock stalk,
At evening in his homeward walk
The Quantock woodman hears.

I, too, have pass'd her on the hills
Setting her little water mills
By spouts and fountains wild —
Such small machinery as she turn'd
Ere she had wept, ere she had mourn'd, —
A young and happy child!

Farewell! and when thy days are told,
Ill-fated Ruth! in hallow'd mold
Thy corpse shall buried be;
For thee a funeral bell shall ring,
And all the congregation sing
A Christian psalm for thee.

W. Wordsworth

321

WRITTEN AMONG THE EUGANEAN HILLS

Many a green isle needs must be
In the deep wide sea of Misery,
Or the mariner, worn and wan,
Never thus could voyage on
Day and night, and night and day,
Drifting on his dreary way,
With the solid darkness black
Closing round his vessel's track;
Whilst above, the sunless sky,
Big with clouds, hangs heavily;
And behind the tempest fleet
Hurries on with lightning feet,
Riving sail, and cord, and plank,
Till the ship has almost drank

Death from the o'erbrimming deep;
And sinks down, down, like that sleep
When the dreamer seems to be
Weltering through eternity;
And the dim low line before
Of a dark and distant shore
Still recedes, as ever still Longing with divided will,
But no power to seek or shun,
He is ever drifted on
O'er the unreposing wave,
To the haven of the grave.

Ah, many flowering islands lie
In the waters of wide Agony:
To such a one this morn was led
My bark, by soft winds piloted.
— 'Mid the mountains Euganean
I stood listening to the pæan
With which the legion'd rooks did hail
The Sun's uprise majestical:
Gathering round with wings all hoar,
Through the dewy mist they soar
Like gray shades, till the eastern heaven
Bursts; and then, — as clouds of even Fleck'd with fire and azure, lie
In the unfathomable sky, —
So their plumes of purple grain
Starr'd with drops of golden rain
Gleam above the sunlight woods,
As in silent multitudes
On the morning's fitful gale
Through the broken mist they sail;
And the vapors cloven and gleaming
Follow down the dark steep streaming,
Till all is bright, and clear, and still
Round the solitary hill.

Beneath is spread like a green sea
The waveless plain of Lombardy,

Bounded by the vaporous air,
Islanded by cities fair;
Underneath Day's azure eyes,
Ocean's nursling, Venice lies, —
A peopled labyrinth of walls,
Amphitrite's destined halls,
Which her hoary sire now paves
With his blue and beaming waves.
Lo! the sun upsprings behind,
Broad, red, radiant, half-reclined
On the level quivering line
Of the waters crystalline;
And before that chasm of light,
As within a furnace bright,
Column, tower, and dome, and spire,
Shine like obelisks of fire,
Pointing with inconstant motion
From the altar of dark ocean
To the sapphire-tinted skies;
As the flames of sacrifice
From the marble shrines did rise
As to pierce the dome of gold
Where Apollo spoke of old.

Sun-girt City! thou hast been Ocean's child, and then his queen;
Now is come a darker day,
And thou soon must be his prey,
If the power that raised thee here
Hallow so thy watery bier.
A less drear ruin then than now,
With thy conquest-branded brow
Stooping to the slave of slaves
From thy throne among the waves
Wilt thou be, — when the sea mew
Flies, as once before it flew,
O'er thine isles depopulate,
And all is in its ancient state,
Save where many a palace gate
With green sea flowers overgrown

Like a rock of ocean's own,
Topples o'er the abandon'd sea
As the tides change sullenly.
The fisher on his watery way
Wandering at the close of day,
Will spread his sail and seize his oar
Till he pass the gloomy shore,
Lest thy dead should, from their sleep,
Bursting o'er the starlight deep,
Lead a rapid mask of death
O'er the waters of his path.

Noon descends around me now:
'Tis the noon of autumn's glow,
When a soft and purple mist
Like a vaporous amethyst,
Or an air-dissolvéd star
Mingling light and fragrance, far
From the curved horizon's bound
To the point of heaven's profound,
Fills the overflowing sky;
And the plains that silent lie
Underneath; the leaves unsodden
Where the infant Frost has trodden
With his morning-wingéd feet
Whose bright print is gleaming yet;
And the red and golden vines
Piercing with their trellised lines
The rough, dark-skirted wilderness,
The dun and bladed grass no less,
Pointing from this hoary tower
In the windless air; the flower
Glimmering at my feet; the line
Of the olive-sandal'd Apennine
In the south dimly islanded;
And the Alps, whose snows are spread
High between the clouds and sun;
And of living things each one;
And my spirit, which so long
Darker'd this swift stream of song, —

Interpenetrated lie
By the glory of the sky;
Be it love, light, harmony,
Odor, or the soul of all
Which from heaven like dew doth fall,
Or the mind which feeds this verse,
Peopling the lone universe.

Noon descends, and after noon
Autumn's evening meets me soon,
Leading the infantine moon
And that one star, which to her
Almost seems to minister
Half the crimson light she brings
From the sunset's radiant springs:
And the soft dreams of the morn
(Which like wingéd winds had borne
To that silent isle, which lies
'Mid remember'd agonies,
The frail bark of this lone being),
Pass, to other sufferers fleeing,
And its ancient pilot, Pain,
Sits beside the helm again.

Other flowering isles must be
In the sea of Life and Agony:
Other spirits float and flee
O'er that gulf: Ev'n now, perhaps,
On some rock the wild wave wraps,
With folded wings they waiting sit
For my bark, to pilot it
To some calm and blooming cove;
Where for me, and those I love,
May a windless bower be built,
Far from passion, pain, and guilt,
In a dell 'mid lawny hills
Which the wild sea murmur fills,
And soft sunshine, and the sound
Of old forests echoing round,
And the light and smell divine

Of all flowers that breathe and shine,
— We may live so happy there,
That the Spirits of the Air
Envying us, may ev'n entice
To our healing paradise
The polluting multitude:
But their rage would be subdued
By that clime divine and calm,
And the winds whose wings rain balm
On the uplifted soul, and leaves
Under which the bright sea heaves;
While each breathless interval
In their whisperings musical
The inspired soul supplies
With its own deep melodies;
And the Love which heals all strife
Circling, like the breath of life,
All things in that sweet abode
With its own mild brotherhood: —
They, not it, would change; and soon
Every sprite beneath the moon
Would repent its envy vain,
And the Earth grow young again.

P. B. Shelley

322

ODE TO THE WEST WIND

O wild West Wind, thou breath of Autumn's being,
Thou, from whose unseen presence the leaves dead
Are driven, like ghosts from an enchanter fleeing,
Yellow, and black, and pale, and hectic red,
Pestilence-stricken multitudes! O thou
Who chariotest to their dark wintry bed
The wingéd seeds, where they lie cold and low,
Each like a corpse within its grave, until Thine azure sister of the Spring shall blow
Her clarion o'er the dreaming earth, and fill (Driving sweet buds like flocks to feed in air)
With living hues and odors plain and hill:

Wild Spirit, which art moving everywhere;
Destroyer and Preserver: Hear, oh hear!

Thou on whose stream, 'mid the steep sky's commotion,
Loose clouds like earth's decaying leaves are shed,
Shook from the tangled boughs of heaven and ocean,
Angels of rain and lightning! there are spread
On the blue surface of thine airy surge,
Like the bright hair uplifted from the head
Of some fierce Mænad, ev'n from the dim verge
Of the horizon to the zenith's height —
The locks of the approaching storm. Thou dirge
Of the dying year, to which this closing night
Will be the dome of a vast sepulcher,
Vaulted with all thy congregated might
Of vapors, from whose solid atmosphere
Black rain, and fire, and hail, will burst: Oh hear!

Thou who didst waken from his summer dreams
The blue Mediterranean, where he lay,
Lull'd by the coil of his crystalline streams,
Beside a pumice isle in Baiæ's bay,
And saw in sleep old palaces and towers
Quivering within the wave's intenser day,
All overgrown with azure moss, and flowers
So sweet, the sense faints picturing them! Thou
For whose path the Atlantic's level powers
Cleave themselves into chasms, while far below
The sea-blooms and the oozy woods which wear
The sapless foliage of the ocean, know
Thy voice, and suddenly grow gray with fear
And tremble and despoil themselves: Oh hear!

If I were a dead leaf thou mightest bear;
If I were a swift cloud to fly with thee;
A wave to pant beneath thy power, and share
The impulse of thy strength, only less free
Than Thou, O uncontrollable! If even
I were as in my boyhood, and could be
The comrade of thy wanderings over heaven,

As then, when to outstrip thy skyey speed
Scarce seem'd a vision, — I would ne'er have striven
As thus with thee in prayer in my sore need.
Oh! lift me as a wave, a leaf, a cloud!
I fall upon the thorns of life! I bleed!
A heavy weight of hours has chain'd and bow'd
One too like thee — tameless, and swift, and proud.

Make me thy lyre, ev'n as the forest is:
What if my leaves are falling like its own!
The tumult of thy mighty harmonies
Will take from both a deep autumnal tone,
Sweet though in sadness. Be thou, Spirit fierce,
My spirit! be thou me, impetuous one!
Drive my dead thoughts over the universe,
Like wither'd leaves, to quicken a new birth:
And, by the incantation of this verse,
Scatter, as from an unextinguish'd hearth
Ashes and sparks, my words among mankind!
Be through my lips to unawaken'd earth
The trumpet of a prophecy! O Wind,
If Winter comes, can Spring be far behind?

P. B. Shelley

323

NATURE AND THE POET

SUGGESTED BY A PICTURE OF PEELE CASTLE IN A STORM PAINTED BY SIR GEORGE BEAUMONT

I was thy neighbor once, thou rugged Pile!
Four summer weeks I dwelt in sight of thee:
I saw thee every day; and all the while
Thy Form was sleeping on a glassy sea.

So pure the sky, so quiet was the air!
So like, so very like, was day to day!
Whene'er I look'd, thy image still was there:
It trembled, but it never pass'd away.

How perfect was the calm! It seem'd no sleep,
No mood, which season takes away, or brings:

I could have fancied that the mighty Deep
Was even the gentlest of all gentle things.

Ah! then — if mine had been the painter's hand
To express what then I saw; and add the gleam,
The light that never was on sea or land,
The consecration, and the Poet's dream, —

I would have planted thee, thou hoary pile,
Amid a world how different from this!
Beside a sea that could not cease to smile;
On tranquil land, beneath a sky of bliss.

Thou shouldst have seem'd a treasure house divine
Of peaceful years; a chronicle of heaven; —
Of all the sunbeams that did ever shine
The very sweetest had to thee been given.

A picture had it been of lasting ease,
Elysian quiet, without toil or strife;
No motion but the moving tide; a breeze;
Or merely silent Nature's breathing life.

Such, in the fond illusion of my heart,
Such picture would I at that time have made;
And seen the soul of truth in every part,
A steadfast peace that might not be betray'd.

So once it would have been, — 'tis so no more;
I have submitted to a new control:
A power is gone, which nothing can restore;
A deep distress hath humanized my soul.

Not for a moment could I now behold
A smiling sea, and be what I have been:
The feeling of my loss will ne'er be old;
This, which I know, I speak with mind serene.

Then, Beaumont, Friend! who would have been the friend
If he had lived, of Him whom I deplore,

This work of thine I blame not, but commend;
This sea in anger, and that dismal shore.

O 'tis a passionate work! — yet wise and well,
Well chosen is the spirit that is here;
That hulk which labors in the deadly swell,
This rueful sky, this pageantry of fear!

And this huge Castle, standing here sublime,
I love to see the look with which it braves,
— Cased in the unfeeling armor of old time —
The lightning, the fierce wind, and trampling waves.

— Farewell, farewell the heart that lives alone,
Housed in a dream, at distance from the Kind!
Such happiness, wherever it be known,
Is to be pitied; for 'tis surely blind.

But welcome fortitude, and patient cheer,
And frequent sights of what is to be borne!
Such sights, or worse, as are before me here: —
Not without hope we suffer and we mourn.

W. Wordsworth

324

THE POET'S DREAM

On a Poet's lips I slept
Dreaming like a love-adept
In the sound his breathing kept;
Nor seeks nor finds he mortal blisses,
But feeds on the aërial kisses
Of shapes that haunt Thought's wildernesses.
He will watch from dawn to gloom
The lake-reflected sun illume
The yellow bees in the ivy-bloom,
Nor heed nor see what things they be —
But from these create he can
Forms more real than living Man,
Nurslings of Immortality!

P. B. Shelley

325

GLEN-ALMAIN, THE NARROW GLEN

In this still place, remote from men,
Sleeps Ossian, in the Narrow Glen;
In this still place, where murmurs on
But one meek streamlet, only one:
He sang of battles, and the breath
Of stormy war, and violent death;
And should, methinks, when all was past
Have rightfully been laid at last
Where rocks were rudely heap'd, and rent
As by a spirit turbulent;
Where sights were rough, and sounds were wild,
And everything unreconciled;
In some complaining, dim retreat,
For fear and melancholy meet;
But this is calm; there cannot be
A more entire tranquillity.
Does then the Bard sleep here indeed?
Or is it but a groundless creed?
What matters it? — I blame them not
Whose fancy in this lonely spot
Was moved; and in such way express'd
Their notion of its perfect rest.
A convent, even a hermit's cell,
Would break the silence of this Dell:
It is not quiet, is not ease;
But something deeper far than these:
The separation that is here
Is of the grave; and of austere
Yet happy feelings of the dead:
And, therefore, was it rightly said
That Ossian, last of all his race!
Lies buried in this lonely place.

W. Wordsworth

326

The World is too much with us; late and soon,
Getting and spending, we lay waste our powers;

Little we see in Nature that is ours;
We have given our hearts away, a sordid boon!

This Sea that bares her bosom to the moon,
The winds that will be howling at all hours
And are upgather'd now like sleeping flowers,
For this, for everything, we are out of tune;

It moves us not. — Great God! I'd rather be
A Pagan suckled in a creed outworn, —
So might I, standing on this pleasant lea,

Have glimpses that would make me less forlorn:
Have sight of Proteus rising from the sea;
Or hear old Triton blow his wreathéd horn.

W. Wordsworth

327

WITHIN KING'S COLLEGE CHAPEL CAMBRIDGE

Tax not the royal Saint with vain expense,
With ill-match'd aims the Architect who plann'd (Albeit laboring for a scanty band
Of white-robed Scholars only) this immense

And glorious work of fine intelligence!
— Give all thou canst; high Heaven rejects the lore
Of nicely calculated less or more: —
So deem'd the man who fashion'd for the sense

These lofty pillars, spread that branching roof
Self-poised, and scoop'd into ten thousand cells
Where light and shade repose, where music dwells

Lingering — and wandering on as loth to die:
Like thoughts whose very sweetness yieldeth proof
That they were born for immortality.

W. Wordsworth

328

ODE ON A GRECIAN URN

Thou still unravish'd bride of quietness,
Thou foster-child of silence and slow time,
Sylvan historian, who canst thus express
A flowery tale more sweetly than our rhyme:
What leaf-fringed legend haunts about thy shape
Of deities or mortals, or of both,
In Tempé or the dales of Arcady?
What men or gods are these? What maidens loth?
What mad pursuit? What struggle to escape?
What pipes and timbrels? What wild ecstasy?

Heard melodies are sweet, but those unheard
Are sweeter; therefore, ye soft pipes, play on;
Not to the sensual ear, but, more endear'd,
Pipe to the spirit ditties of no tone:
Fair youth, beneath the trees, thou canst not leave
Thy song, nor ever can those trees be bare;
Bo'd Lover, never, never canst thou kiss,
Tho :gh winning near the goal — yet, do not grieve;
She cannot fade, though thou hast not thy bliss,
Forever wilt thou love, and she be fair!

Ah, happy, happy boughs! that cannot shed
Your leaves, nor ever bid the Spring adieu;
And, happy melodist, unweariéd,
Forever piping songs forever new;
More happy love! more happy, happy love!
Forever warm and still to be enjoy'd,
Forever panting, and forever young;
All breathing human passion far above,
That leaves a heart high-sorrowful and cloy'd,
A burning forehead, and a parching tongue.

Who are these coming to the sacrifice?
To what green altar, O mysterious priest,
Lead'st thou that heifer lowing at the skies,
And all her silken flanks with garlands drest?

What little town by river or seashore,
Or mountain-built with peaceful citadel,
Is emptied of this folk, this pious morn?
And, little town, thy streets forevermore
Will silent be; and not a soul to tell
Why thou art desolate, can e'er return.

O Attic shape! Fair attitude! with brede
Of marble men and maidens overwrought,
With forest branches and the trodden weed;
Thou, silent form, dost tease us out of thought
As doth eternity: Cold Pastoral!
When old age shall this generation waste,
Thou shalt remain, in midst of other woe
Than ours, a friend to man, to whom thou say'st,
"Beauty is truth, truth beauty," — that is all
Ye know on earth, and all ye need to know.

J. Keats

329
YOUTH AND AGE

Verse, a breeze 'mid blossoms straying,
Where Hope clung feeding, like a bee —
Both were mine! Life went a-maying
With Nature, Hope, and Poesy,
When I was young!
When I was young? — Ah, woeful when!
Ah! for the change 'twixt Now and Then!
This breathing house not built with hands,
This body that does me grievous wrong,
O'er aëry cliffs and glittering sands
How lightly then it flash'd along:
Like those trim skiffs, unknown of yore,
On winding lakes and rivers wide,
That ask no aid of sail or oar,
That fear no spite of wind or tide!
Naught cared this body for wind or weather
When Youth and I lived in't together.

Flowers are lovely; Love is flowerlike;
Friendship is a sheltering tree;
O! the joys, that came down showerlike,
Of Friendship, Love, and Liberty,
Ere I was old!
Ere I was old? Ah woeful Ere,
Which tells me, Youth's no longer here!
O Youth! for years so many and sweet,
'Tis known that Thou and I were one,
I'll think it but a fond conceit —
It cannot be, that Thou art gone!
Thy vesper bell hath not yet toll'd: —
And thou wert aye a masker bold!
What strange disguise hast now put on
To make believe that Thou art gone?
I see these locks in silvery slips,
This drooping gait, this alter'd size:
But Springtide blossoms on thy lips,
And tears take sunshine from thine eyes!
Life is but Thought: so think I will
That Youth and I are housemates still.

Dewdrops are the gems of morning,
But the tears of mournful eve!
Where no hope is, life's a warning
That only serves to make us grieve
When we are old:
— That only serves to make us grieve
With oft and tedious taking-leave,
Like some poor nigh-related guest
That may not rudely be dismist,
Yet hath outstay'd his welcome while,
And tells the jest without the smile.

S. T. Coleridge

330

THE TWO APRIL MORNINGS

We walk'd along, while bright and red
Uprose the morning sun;

And Matthew stopp'd, he look'd, and said
"The will of God be done!"

A village schoolmaster was he,
With hair of glittering gray;
As blithe a man as you could see
On a spring holiday.

And on that morning, through the grass
And by the steaming rills
We travel'd merrily, to pass
A day among the hills.

"Our work," said I, "was well begun;
Then, from thy breast what thought,
Beneath so beautiful a sun,
So sad a sigh has brought?'

A second time did Matthew stop;
And fixing still his eye
Upon the eastern mountain top,
To me he made reply:

"Yon cloud with that long purple cleft
Brings fresh into my mind
A day like this, which I have left
Full thirty years behind.

"And just above yon slope of corn
Such colors, and no other,
Were in the sky that April morn,
Of this the very brother.

"With rod and line I sued the sport
Which that sweet season gave,
And to the churchyard come, stopp'd short
Beside my daughter's grave.

"Nine summers had she scarcely seen,
The pride of all the vale;

And then she sang, — she would have been
A very nightingale.

"Six feet in earth my Emma lay;
And yet I loved her more —
For so it seem'd — than till that day
I e'er had loved before.

"And turning from her grave, I met,
Beside the churchyard yew,
A blooming Girl, whose hair was wet
With points of morning dew.

"A basket on her head she bare;
Her brow was smooth and white:
To see a child so very fair,
It was a pure delight!

"No fountain from its rocky cave
E'er tripp'd with foot so free;
She seem'd as happy as a wave
That dances on the sea.

"There came from me a sigh of pain
Which I could ill confine;
I look'd at her, and look'd again:
And did not wish her mine!"

— Matthew is in his grave, yet now
Methinks I see him stand
As at that moment, with a bough
Of wilding in his hand.

W. Wordsworth

331

THE FOUNTAIN

A CONVERSATION

We talk'd with open heart, and tongue
Affectionate and true.

A pair of friends, though I was young,
And Matthew seventy-two.

We lay beneath a spreading oak,
Beside a mossy seat;
And from the turf a fountain broke
And gurgled at our feet.

"Now, Matthew!" said I, "let us match
This water's pleasant tune
With some old border-song, or catch
That suits a summer's noon;

"Or of the church clock and the chimes
Sing here beneath the shade
That half-mad thing of witty rhymes
Which you last April made!"

In silence Matthew lay, and eyed
The spring beneath the tree;
And thus the dear old man replied,
The gray-hair'd man of glee:

"No check, no stay, this Streamlet fears,
How merrily it goes!
'Twill murmur on a thousand years
And flow as now it flows.

"And here, on this delightful day,
I cannot choose but think
How oft, a vigorous man, I lay
Beside this fountain's brink.

"My eyes are dim with childish tears,
My heart is idly stirr'd,
For the same sound is in my ears
Which in those days I heard.

"Thus fares it still in our decay:
And yet the wiser mind

Mourns less for what Age takes away,
Than what it leaves behind.

"The blackbird amid leafy trees,
The lark above the hill,
Let loose their carols when they please,
Are quiet when they will.

"With Nature never do they wage
A foolish strife; they see
A happy youth, and their old age
Is beautiful and free:

"But we are press'd by heavy laws;
And often, glad no more,
We wear a face of joy, because
We have been glad of yore.

"If there be one who need bemoan
His kindred laid in earth,
The household hearts that were his own, —
It is the man of mirth.

"My days, my friend, are almost gone,
My life has been approved,
And many love me; but by none
Am I enough beloved."

"Now both himself and me he wrongs,
The man who thus complains!
I live and sing my idle songs
Upon these happy plains:

"And Matthew, for thy children dead
I'll be a son to thee!"
At this he grasp'd my hand and said,
"Alas! that cannot be."

— We rose up from the fountain side;
And down the smooth descent

Of the green sheep track did we glide;
And through the wood we went;

And ere we came to Leonard's rock
He sang those witty rhymes
About the crazy old church clock,
And the bewilder'd chimes.

W. Wordsworth

332
THE RIVER OF LIFE

The more we live, more brief appear
Our life's succeeding stages:
A day to childhood seems a year,
And years like passing ages.

The gladsome current of our youth,
Ere passion yet disorders,
Steals lingering like a river smooth
Along its grassy borders.

But as the careworn cheek grows wan,
And sorrow's shafts fly thicker,
Ye Stars, that measure life to man,
Why seem your courses quicker?

When joys have lost their bloom and breath
And life itself is vapid,
Why, as we reach the Falls of Death,
Feel we its tide more rapid?

It may be strange — yet who would change
Time's course to slower speeding,
When one by one our friends have gone
And left our bosoms bleeding?

Heaven gives our years of fading strength
Indemnifying fleetness;

And those of youth, a seeming length,
Proportion'd to their sweetness.

T. Campbell

333
THE HUMAN SEASONS

Four Seasons fill the measure of the year;
There are four seasons in the mind of man:
He has his lusty Spring, when fancy clear
Takes in all beauty with an easy span:

He has his Summer, when luxuriously
Spring's honey'd cud of youthful thought he loves
To ruminate, and by such dreaming high
Is nearest unto heaven: quiet coves

His soul has in its Autumn, when his wings
He furleth close; contented so to look
On mists in idleness — to let fair things
Pass by unheeded as a threshold brook.

He has his Winter too of pale misfeature,
Or else he would forego his mortal nature.

J. Keats

334
A DIRGE

Rough wind, that moanest loud
Grief too sad for song;
Wild wind, when sullen cloud
Knells all the night long;
Sad storm whose tears are vain,
Bare woods whose branches stain,
Deep caves and dreary main, —
Wail for the world's wrong!

P. B. Shelley

335
THRENOS

O World! O Life! O Time!
On whose last steps I climb,
  Trembling at that where I had stood before;
When will return the glory of your prime?
    No more — Oh, nevermore!

Out of the day and night
A joy has taken flight:
  Fresh spring, and summer, and winter hoar
Move my faint heart with grief, but with delight
    No more — Oh, nevermore!

P. B. Shelley

336
THE TROSACHS

There's not a nook within this solemn Pass,
But were an apt confessional for One
Taught by his summer spent, his autumn gone,
That Life is but a tale of morning grass

Wither'd at eve. From scenes of art which chase
That thought away, turn, and with watchful eyes
Feed it 'mid Nature's old felicities,
Rocks, rivers, and smooth lakes more clear than glass

Untouch'd, unbreathed upon: — Thrice happy quest,
If from a golden perch of aspen spray
(October's workmanship to rival May),

The pensive warbler of the ruddy breast
That moral sweeten by a heaven-taught lay,
Lulling the year, with all its cares, to rest!

W. Wordsworth

337

My heart leaps up when I behold
  A rainbow in the sky:

So was it when my life began,
So is it now I am a man,
So be it when I shall grow old
Or let me die!
The Child is father of the Man:
And I could wish my days to be Bound each to each by natural piety.

W. Wordsworth

338

ODE ON INTIMATIONS OF IMMORTALITY FROM RECOLLECTIONS OF EARLY CHILDHOOD

There was a time when meadow, grove, and stream,
The earth, and every common sight
To me did seem
Apparel'd in celestial light,
The glory and the freshness of a dream.
It is not now as it hath been of yore;—
Turn wheresoe'er I may,
By night or day,
The things which I have seen I now can see no more.
The rainbow comes and goes,
And lovely is the rose;
The moon doth with delight
Look round her when the heavens are bare;
Waters on a starry night
Are beautiful and fair;
The sunshine is a glorious birth;
But yet I know, where'er I go,
That there hath passed away a glory from the earth.

Now, while the birds thus sing a joyous song,
And while the young lambs bound
As to the tabor's sound,
To me alone there came a thought of grief:
A timely utterance gave that thought relief,
And I again am strong.

The cataracts blow their trumpets from the steep; —
No more shall grief of mine the season wrong:
I hear the echoes through the mountains throng,
The winds come to me from the fields of sleep.
And all the earth is gay;
Land and sea
Give themselves up to jollity,
And with the heart of May
Doth every beast keep holiday; —
Thou child of joy
Shout round me, let me hear thy shouts, thou happy
Shepherd boy!

Ye blesséd Creatures, I have heard the call
Ye to each other make; I see
The heavens laugh with you in your jubilee;
My heart is at your festival,
My head hath its coronal,
The fullness of your bliss, I feel — I feel it all.
Oh evil day! if I were sullen
While Earth herself is adorning
This sweet May morning;
And the children are culling
On every side
In a thousand valleys far and wide,
Fresh flowers; while the sun shines warm
And the babe leaps up on his mother's arm: —
I hear, I hear, with joy I hear!
— But there's a tree, of many, one,
A single field which I have look'd upon,
Both of them speak of something that is gone:
The pansy at my feet
Doth the same tale repeat:
Whither is fled the visionary gleam?
Where is it now, the glory and the dream?

Our birth is but a sleep and a forgetting;
The Soul that rises with us, our life's Star,
Hath had elsewhere its setting
And cometh from afar;

Not in entire forgetfulness,
And not in utter nakedness,
But trailing clouds of glory do we come
From God, who is our home:
Heaven lies about us in our infancy!
Shades of the prison house begin to close
Upon the growing Boy,
But he beholds the light, and whence it flows,
He sees it in his joy;
The Youth, who daily farther from the east
Must travel, still is Nature's priest,
And by the vision splendid
Is on his way attended;
At length the Man perceives it die away,
And fade into the light of common day.

Earth fills her lap with pleasures of her own;
Yearnings she hath in her own natural kind,
And, even with something of a mother's mind
And no unworthy aim,
The homely nurse doth all she can
To make her foster-child, her inmate, Man,
Forget the glories he hath known,
And that imperial palace whence he came.

Behold the Child among his newborn blisses,
A six years' darling of a pigmy size!
See, where 'mid work of his own hand he lies,
Fretted by sallies of his mother's kisses,
With light upon him from his father's eyes!
See, at his feet, some little plan or chart,
Some fragment from his dream of human life,
Shaped by himself with newly learnéd art;
A wedding or a festival,
A mourning or a funeral;
And this hath now his heart,
And unto this he frames his song:
Then will he fit his tongue
To dialogues of business, love, or strife;
But it will not be long

Ere this be thrown aside,
And with new joy and pride
The little actor cons another part;
Filling from time to time his "humorous stage"
With all the Persons, down to palsied Age,
That life brings with her in her equipage;
As if his whole vocation
Were endless imitation.

Thou, whose exterior semblance doth belie
Thy soul's immensity;
Thou best philosopher, who yet dost keep
Thy heritage, thou eye among the blind,
That, deaf and silent, read'st the eternal deep,
Haunted forever by the eternal Mind, —
Mighty Prophet! Seer blest!
On whom those truths do rest
Which we are toiling all our lives to find,
In darkness lost, the darkness of the grave;
Thou, over whom thy Immortality
Broods like the day, a master o'er a slave,
A Presence which is not to be put by;
Thou little child, yet glorious in the might
Of heaven-born freedom on thy being's height,
Why with such earnest pains dost thou provoke
The years to bring the inevitable yoke,
Thus blindly with thy blessedness at strife?
Full soon thy soul shall have her earthly freight,
And custom lie upon thee with a weight
Heavy as frost, and deep almost as life!

O joy! that in our embers
Is something that doth live,
That Nature yet remembers
What was so fugitive!
The thought of our past years in me doth breed
Perpetual benediction: not indeed
For that which is most worthy to be blest,
Delight and liberty, the simple creed
Of Childhood, whether busy or at rest,

With new-fledged hope still fluttering in his breast: —
Not for these I raise
The song of thanks and praise;
But for those obstinate questionings
Of sense and outward things,
Fallings from us, vanishings;
Blank misgivings of a creature
Moving about in worlds not realized,
High instincts, before which our mortal nature
Did tremble like a guilty thing surprised:
But for those first affections,
Those shadowy recollections,
Which, be they what they may,
Are yet the fountain-light of all our day,
Are yet a master-light of all our seeing;
Uphold us, cherish, and have power to make
Our noisy years seem moments in the being
Of the eternal Silence: truths that wake,
To perish never;
Which neither listlessness, nor mad endeavor,
Nor man nor boy
Nor all that is at enmity with joy,
Can utterly abolish or destroy!
Hence, in a season of calm weather
Though inland far we be,
Our souls have sight of that immortal sea
Which brought us hither;
Can in a moment travel thither —
And see the children sport upon the shore,
And hear the mighty waters rolling evermore.

Then, sing ye birds, sing, sing a joyous song!
And let the young lambs bound
As to the tabor's sound!
We, in thought, will join your throng
Ye that pipe and ye that play,
Ye that through your hearts to-day
Feel the gladness of the May!
What though the radiance which was once so bright
Be now forever taken from my sight,

Though nothing can bring back the hour
Of splendor in the grass, of glory in the flower;
We will grieve not, rather find
Strength in what remains behind;
In the primal sympathy
Which having been must ever be;
In the soothing thoughts that spring
Out of human suffering;
In the faith that looks through death,
In years that bring the philosophic mind.

And O, ye Fountains, Meadows, Hills, and Groves,
Forebode not any severing of our loves!
Yet in my heart of hearts I feel your might;
I only have relinquish'd one delight
To live beneath your more habitual sway:
I love the brooks which down their channels fret
Even more than when I tripp'd lightly as they;
The innocent brightness of a newborn day
Is lovely yet;
The clouds that gather round the setting sun
Do take a sober coloring from an eye
That hath kept watch o'er man's mortality;
Another race hath been, and other palms are won.
Thanks to the human heart by which we live,
Thanks to its tenderness, its joys, and fears,
To me the meanest flower that blows can give
Thoughts that do often lie too deep for tears.

W. Wordsworth

339

Music, when soft voices die,
Vibrates in the memory —
Odors, when sweet violets sicken,
Live within the sense they quicken.

Rose leaves, when the rose is dead,
Are heap'd for the beloved's bed;
And so thy thoughts, when Thou art gone,
Love itself shall slumber on.

P. B. Shelley

APPENDIX

NOTES, STUDY SUGGESTIONS, AND INTERPRETATIONS [1]

BOOK FIRST

1. Do you hear the internal rhymes? What is the refrain meant to suggest? Palms are pussy-willows; may is the hawthorn.

2 and 3. These are songs from The Tempest. In what other play by Shakespeare do fairies appear? Whist is hushed. Featly is nimbly, daintily.

4. [Rouse Memnon's mother: Awaken the Dawn from the dark Earth and the clouds where she is resting. This is one of that limited class of early myths which may be reasonably interpreted as representations of natural phenomena. Aurora in the old mythology is mother of Memnon (the East), and wife of Tithonus (the appearances of Earth and Sky during the last hours of Night). She leaves him every morning in renewed youth, to prepare the way for Phœbus (the Sun), whilst Tithonus remains in perpetual old age and grayness. By Peneus' stream: Phœbus loved the Nymph Daphne whom he met by the river Peneus in the vale of Tempe. Amphion's lyre: He was said to have built the walls of Thebes to the sound of his music. Night like a drunkard reels: Compare Romeo and Juliet, Act II, Scene 3: "The grey-eyed morn smiles," &c. — It should be added that three lines, which appeared hopelessly misprinted, have been omitted in this Poem — P.] What oddity in the meter of the poem strikes you? Divide the poem into four sections. Flora was the goddess of flowers, Phœbus the god of the sun, Amphion a famous — probably mythical — Greek bard, Zephyr the god of the west wind.

5 and 6. In what form of the sonnet are these poems written? See the section on "The Technique of Verse." What is the relation of the couplet to the rest of the poem in a sonnet written in this way? Fell is cruel.

7. [A fine example of the highwrought and conventional Elizabethan Pastoralism, which it would be unreasonable to criticize on the ground of the unshepherdlike or unreal character of some images suggested. Stanza 6 was perhaps inserted by Izaak Walton. — P.]

8. The title means "Conquers all." What conquers all? [This

[1] Throughout this section, Palgrave's own notes are distinguished by being enclosed in brackets. They are indicated by the initial P.

beautiful lyric is one of several recovered from the very rare Elizabethan Song-Books, for the publication of which our thanks are due to Mr. A. H. Bullen (1887, 1888). — P.]

9. How does the sound of this poem — the breathlessness of its lines — fit in with the sense?

10 and 11. These are songs taken from As You Like It. See if you can find the music for these lyrics.

12. Donne is thinking of the proverb, "Out of sight, out of mind." [One stanza has been here omitted. Similar omissions occur in a few other poems. The more serious abbreviation by which it has been attempted to bring Crashaw's Wishes and Shelley's Euganean Hills, with one or two more, within the scheme of this selection, is commended with much diffidence to the judgment of readers acquainted with the original pieces. — P.]

13. [Sidney's poetry is singularly unequal; his short life, his frequent absorption in public employment, hindered doubtless the development of his genius. His great contemporary fame, second only, it appears, to Spenser's, has been hence obscured. At times he is heavy and even prosaic; his simplicity is rude and bare; his verse unmelodious. These, however, are the "defects of his merits." — P.] The title means "The Highway of Love." What was Parnassus? Was Sidney telling the truth in lines 2–4? Do you suppose Stella was the girl's real name? Write a paraphrase of this poem.

16. Was Shakespeare really as lacking in self-confidence as this sonnet would lead you to suppose? Did he ever, for example, publish his plays? Put lines 5–8 in your own words. If you were a great genius like Shakespeare, do you think it possible that at certain times you would have passing moods of depression? Bootless is useless, unavailing.

17. Compare this poem with 12, Donne's Present in Absence. Blood is temperament.

19. [Readers who have visited Italy will be reminded of more than one picture by this gorgeous Vision of Beauty, equally sublime and pure in its Paradisaical naturalness. Lodge wrote it on a voyage to "the Islands of Terceras and the Canaries"; and he seems to have caught, in those southern seas, no small portion of the qualities which marked the almost contemporary Art of Venice — the glory and the glow of Veronese, Titian, or Tintoret. — From the same romance is No. 71: a charming picture in the purest style of the later Italian Renaissance. The clear (l. 1) is the crystalline or outermost heaven of the old cosmography. For a fair there's fairer none: If you desire a Beauty, there is none more beautiful than Rosaline. — P.] What effect has the lengthening of the last line?

22. [Another gracious lyric from an Elizabethan Song-Book, first reprinted (it is believed) in Mr. W. J. Linton's Rare Poems, in 1883. — P.]

What in this poem indicates that it was intended for a musical setting?

23. Notice how supremely self-confident Shakespeare is in this sonnet; he asserts boldly that his lines will give immortality to his love. Is this confidence inconsistent with the pessimism of 16? That fair thou owest means that beauty you possess.

25. [From one of the three Song-Books of T. Campion, who appears to have been author of the words which he set to music. His merit as a lyrical poet (recognized in his own time, but since then forgotten) has been again brought to light by Mr. Bullen's taste and research: swerving (st. 2) is his conjecture for changing in the text of 1601. — P.] The title means kisses.

26. Is Campion's advice still true? Suggest modern substitutes for line 15.

27. This poem is taken from Love's Labour's Lost. Explain the title.

30. The title means "In Tears." The poem comes from Dowland. What paradoxes are advanced in the second stanza?

31. After "admit" in line 2 insert "that there are" to get the sense. Does Shakespeare mean the double negative of the last line?

32. [This lovely song appears, as here given, in Puttenham's Arte of English Poesie, 1589. A longer and inferior form was published in the Arcadia of 1590; but Puttenham's prefatory words clearly assign his version to Sidney's own authorship. — P.]

35. The title, from the Latin poet Horace, means "Seize the Day" — make use of your opportunities before it is too late. The poem is taken from Twelfth Night. Notice how Robert Herrick expands this philosophy in 108, Counsel to Girls.

36. This song comes from Dowland. Autolycus is the gay peddler in Shakespeare's A Winter's Tale.

37. This song is from Love's Labour's Lost. Could you guess from the exact details which Shakespeare gives that he knew intimately how people live in the country? Crabs are crab apples. Keel means to make cooler by stirring round. Ways be foul refers to the condition of the roads.

38. Line 4 of this sonnet has often been selected as one of the finest lines in all Shakespeare's writings.

39. Do people often act as Shakespeare describes himself as acting in lines 9–12 of this sonnet? Expense is loss. Tell is count, as in Milton's L'Allegro: "Every shepherd tells his tale," that is, "counts his flock."

40. Compare this poem with 46 and with Macbeth's famous lines on sleep in Shakespeare's Macbeth, II, 2, 35 f. Prease is press. Baiting is feeding — here encouragement. Shield of proof is tested armor. Grace is favor. What additional requisites would a modern person need for good sleep?

41 [Nativity, once in the main of light: when a star has risen and entered on the full stream of light; — another of the astrological phrases no longer familiar. — P.]

42. [upon misprision growing: either, granted in error, or, on the growth of contempt. — P.] What are some legal terms used in this sonnet? Would you argue from these that Shakespeare knew more about law than the ordinary man?

43. [With the tone of this Sonnet compare Hamlet's "Give me that man That is not passion's slave," etc. Shakespeare's writings show the deepest sensitiveness to passion: — hence the attraction he felt in the contrasting effects of apathy. — P.] Also compare the thought of lines 9–10 with stanza 14 of Gray's Elegy in a Country Churchyard, 187, and with Emerson's idea in The Rhodora that "beauty is its own excuse for being." Is the last line true?

44. [grame: sorrow. Renaissance influences long impeded the return of English poets to the charming realism of this and a few other poems by Wyat. — P.] Do you like the frequent refrains of this poem?

45. [Pandion in the ancient fable was father to Philomela. — P.]

47. [In the old legend it is now Philomela, now Procne (the swallow) who suffers violence from Tereus. This song has a fascination in its calm intensity of passion; that "sad earnestness and vivid exactness" which Cardinal Newman ascribes to the masterpieces of ancient poetry. — P.] Is the nightingale's song really mournful? See what Keats says in his famous Ode to a Nightingale, 290, lines 5–6. Who was King Pandion? Philomela? Tereus?

46. Does Daniels give an accurate description of dreams in line 9? Still means always, and approve means prove.

48. This song is taken from Measure for Measure. The title means "In Vain." What does "forsworn" mean?

49. This is sometimes regarded as the greatest sonnet of the Elizabethan Age, Shakespeare's excepted. Why has it proved so attractive? All Italian sonnets and most Elizabethan sonnets as well show a turn of thought after the eighth line: does this sonnet conform to type? Is the thought convincing — true to life?

50. The title means: "Surely every man walketh in a vain show" (Psalms, XXXIX, 6). How has Campion arranged his rhymes? Which are monosyllabic? dissyllabic? Proved means approved.

51. Censures means judges.

52. [Exquisite in its equably-balanced metrical flow. — P.] If this poem were set to music, what ought the character of the music to be? Secure means safe, free from worry and care.

53. [Judging by its style, this beautiful example of old simplicity and feeling may, perhaps, be referred to the earlier years of Elizabeth. Late forgot: lately. — P.] This poem is taken from a song collection by William Byrd. Comment upon the rhymes. Read the verses aloud, to make sure you hear all of them.

54. Paraphrase the last stanza. Cassandra was a daughter of Priam, king of Troy. Apollo endowed her with the gift of prophecy, but later in anger decreed that no one should believe what she foretold.

55. What does the title mean? Is the thought of this poem the same as that of 49?

56. This song comes from As You Like It. Which mood predominates in the song, the cynical or the jolly? Is it inconsistent to have both?

57. [Printed in a little Anthology by Nicholas Breton, 1597. It is, however, a stronger and finer piece of work than any known to be his. — St. 1: silly: simple; dole: grief; chief: chiefly. St. 3: If there be . . . : obscure: Perhaps, if there be any who speak harshly of thee, thy pain may plead for pity from Fate. This poem, with 60 and 143, are each graceful variations of a long popular theme. — P.]

58. [That busy archer: Cupid. Descries: used actively; points out. — "The last line of this poem is a little obscured by transposition. He means, Do they call ungratefulness there a virtue?" (C. Lamb). — P.] Can you think of any Greek myth that supplies an answer to lines 3 and 4? What does Sidney tell you, indirectly, about his own supposed plight? Which line seems to you the finest? In prose virtue, in the last line, would follow ungratefulness.

59. The title means "O Cruel Love." [White Iope: suggested, Mr. Bullen notes, by a passage in Propertius (iii, 20) describing Spirits in the lower world:

Vobiscum est Iope, vobiscum candida Tyro. — P.]

60. This poem is from a novel called Menaphon. Wanton means playful.

61. What, exactly, does Drummond mean by line 8?

62. This song is taken from Twelfth Night.

63. Ramage is a hubbub, a confused noise. Harbinger means forerunner.

64. From Shakespeare's Cymbeline. Fidele in this play is an assumed name of the disguised heroine, Imogen. What line in this poem especially attracts you? Thunder-stone is thunderbolt.

65. From The Tempest. A fathom is a measure — six feet.

66. From The White Devil. ["I never saw anything like this funeral dirge," says Charles Lamb, "except the ditty which reminds Ferdinand of his drowned father in The Tempest. As that is of the water, watery; so this is of the earth, earthy. Both have that intenseness of feeling, which seems to resolve itself into the element which it contemplates." — P.] Which of these two dirges do you prefer? Why?

67. The title means "After Death." Even if Shakespeare guessed that what he said here was not true, would his sonnet still seem to him a pretty compliment worth while paying? Lover here means friend.

68. Read this poem aloud, and then describe the character of its music. Which do you prefer, this or the preceding poem? Why?

69. From The Merchant of Venice. These verses are sung while Bassanio is pondering whether to choose the gold, the silver, or the lead casket. Some commentators say that the rhymes of the poem give him a hint. Where? Fancy here means fancy for somebody — affection or love.

70. From Wilbye's collection. What does the title mean?

71. From the romance, Rosalinde. Do you like the continued rhymes of lines 5–8 in each stanza? Of what play by Shakespeare is a Rosalind the heroine? Is there any connection?

72. From Alexander and Campaspe.

73. The stare is the starling.

74. [This "Spousal Verse" was written in honour of the Ladies Elizabeth and Katherine Somerset. Nowhere has Spenser more emphatically displayed himself as the very poet of Beauty: The Renaissance impulse in England is here seen at its highest and purest. — P.] The title signifies a poem written in honor of a wedding; in this case, of a double wedding. By what figure of speech does Spenser refer to the brides? Some one has said that Spenser never wrote an unmusical line: would this poem, in your opinion, prove the poet's wonderful command of the music of words? Quote lines that especially please you. Where does Spenser refer to himself? What does he tell you? Look up the following references to classic myths: Zephyrus, Titan, Leda, Peneus, Hercules, Hesper, twins of Jove, Venus, Cynthia, Echo. Paramours means lovers. Full featously means very skillfully. Vermeil means vermilion. Eftsoons means immediately. Whilom means formerly. Baldric is a belt. Tide is time. The "bricky towers" refers to a quarter of London once used by the medieval order of Knights Templars, but occupied to-day by groups of lawyers.

75. Compare this with Campion's The Man of Life Upright, 79. Which is more musical? more thought-provoking? more likely to place you in the proper mood?

76. The title means "Thus Passes." A much-quoted Latin proverb is to be understood — "Sic transit gloria mundi: Thus passes the glory of the world."

77. Do you agree with the thought of this poem?

80. This sonnet is an extended metaphor. Turn it into a simile, using the words "like" and "as" several times.

82. Shakespeare writes this sonnet in a mood of despair as deep as Hamlet ever displayed. Put into your own words lines 2, 8, 9, 10, and 12. Simplicity is used in an uncomplimentary sense, to mean foolishness.

83. See if you can find Emerson's Good-Bye, Proud World, and compare the thought in the two poems.

BOOK SECOND

85. [Whist: hushed. Than: obsolete for then: Pan: used here for the Lord of all. Consort: Milton's spelling of this word, here and elsewhere, has been followed, as it is uncertain whether he used it in the sense of accompanying, or simply for concert. Lars and Lemures: household gods and spirits of relations dead. Flamens: Roman priest. That twice-batter'd god: Dagon. Osiris, the Egyptian god of Agriculture (here, perhaps by confusion with Apis, figured as a Bull) was torn to pieces by Typho and embalmed after death in a sacred chest. This myth, reproduced in Syria and Greece in the legends of Thammuz, Adonis, and perhaps Absyrtus, may have originally signified the annual death of the Sun or the Year under the influences of the winter darkness. Horus, the son of Osiris, as the New Year, in his turn overcomes Typho. — P.] This great poem of Milton's, written when he was only twenty-one years old, is almost a textbook in mythology. It is worth your while to go through the poem and to make a list, in column form, of all the references to Greek, Latin, Egyptian, and other myths. The poem is, of course, rich likewise in references and allusions to the Bible; and a similar list may be made of such terms. How are the two parts of the poem distinguished by means of the meter and the rhyme schemes? Is the Hymn really a "humble" one, as Milton calls it? What are some words used by Milton that look familiar, but that are given an odd meaning? Look up in the dictionary any word that puzzles you. Which lines express particularly well the poet's religious emotion? Would you say that the poem is worthy of the subject? Trinal means threefold. Lucifer is the morning star. Weltering means rolling. Ychained is an old form for the past participle; to get the meaning, drop the y. Eyn means eyes; it is an archaic plural form — compare oxen. Youngest-teemed is last-born.

86. Dryden's definite object in this hymn in honor of the patron saint of music was to produce a series of onomatopoetic effects — see the Introduction, on "The Technique of Verse." Which passages of this kind are especially good? By what means does Dryden produce his effects — is it a matter of individual words, or of a combination of words? Learn now and for all time the myth of Orpheus, constantly alluded to in poetry. Jubal was, according to the Bible (Genesis, IV, 21), the father of all musicians. Do you like the word sequacious, in the next to the last stanza?

[87. The Late Massacre: the Vaudois persecution, carried on in 1655 by the Duke of Savoy. No more mighty Sonnet than this "collect in verse," as it has been justly named, probably can be found in any language. Readers should observe that it is constructed on the original Italian or Provençal model. This form in a language such as ours, not affluent in rhyme, presents great difficulties; the rhymes are apt to be forced, or the substance commonplace. But, when successfully handled, it has a unity and a beauty of effect which place the strict Sonnet above the less compact and less lyrical systems adopted by Shakespeare. Sidney, Spenser, and other Elizabethan poets. — P.] Milton, Latin Secretary to Cromwell when this slaughter of a number of Protestants in the Vaudois region of France occurred, wrote state papers protesting against the crime, and also composed this poem, by many regarded as the greatest of his sonnets. The lines sound as if they had been taken from one of the Prophets of the Bible. Read the poem aloud, slowly and resonantly, to get its full effect. The Puritans, who did not like the Church of Rome, often referred to it as Babylon; Milton calls the Pope "the triple Tyrant."

88. The verse form is, to a certain extent, an imitation of one of the favorite forms of the Latin poet Horace, but the latter, of course, never used rhyme. Which stanza of this poem, do you suppose, has posterity picked out as the finest? One such stanza has become very famous. Is Marvell just to his enemies? Did Cromwell deserve the praise here given him? Did he really force his "star" to do his will, or was he a slave, as most people are, to his environment and age? Bergamot is a pear-tree. Climacteric is climax. The Pict means the people of Scotland. [Cromwell returned from Ireland in 1650, and Marvell probably wrote his lines soon after, whilst living at Nunappleton in the Fairfax household. It is hence not surprising that (st. 21–24) he should have been deceived by Cromwell's professed submissiveness to the Parliament which, when it declined to register his decrees, he expelled by armed violence: — one despotism, by natural law, replacing another. The poet's insight has, however, truly prophesied that result in his last two lines.

This Ode, beyond doubt one of the finest in our language, and more in Milton's style than has been reached by any other poet, is occasionally obscure from imitation of the condensed Latin syntax. The meaning of st. 5 is "rivalry or hostility are the same to a lofty spirit, and limitation more hateful than opposition." The allusion in st. 11 is to the old physical doctrines of the non-existence of a vacuum and the impenetrability of matter: — in st. 17 to the omen traditionally connected with the foundation of the Capitol at Rome: — forced, fated. The ancient belief that certain years in life complete natural periods and are hence peculiarly exposed to death, is introduced in st. 26 by the word climacteric. — P.]

89. [Lycidas: The person here lamented is Milton's college contemporary, Edward King, drowned in 1637 whilst crossing from Chester to Ireland. Strict Pastoral Poetry was first written or perfected by the Dorian Greeks settled in Sicily: but the conventional use of it, exhibited more magnificently in Lycidas than in any other pastoral, is apparently of Roman origin. Milton, employing the noble freedom of a great artist, has here united ancient mythology, with what may be called the modern mythology of Camus and Saint Peter, — to direct Christian images. Yet the poem, if it gains in historical interest, suffers in poetry by the harsh intrusion of the writer's narrow and violent theological politics. — The metrical structure of this glorious elegy is partly derived from Italian models. Sisters of the sacred well: the Muses, said to frequent the Pierian Spring at the foot of Mount Olympus. Mona: Anglesea, called by the Welsh poets, the Dark Island, from its dense forests. Deva: the Dee, a river which may have derived its magical character from Celtic tradition; it was long the boundary of Briton and English. Orpheus was torn to pieces by the Thracian women women. The blind Fury: Atropos, fabled to cut the thread of life. Arethus and Mincius: Sicilian and Italian waters here alluded to as representing the pastoral poetry of Theocritus and Vergil. Oat: pipe, used here like Collins' oaten stop l. 1, No. 186, for Song. Hippotades: Æolus, god of the Winds. Panope: a Nereid. Certain names of local deities in the Hellenic mythology render some feature in the natural landscape, which the Greeks studied and analysed with their usual unequalled insight and feeling. Panope seems to express the boundlessness of the ocean-horizon when seen from a height, as compared with the limited sky-line of the land in hilly countries such as Greece or Asia Minor. Camus: the Cam: put for King's University. The sanguine flower: the Hyacinth of the ancients: probably our Iris. The Pilot: Saint Peter, figuratively introduced as the head of the Church on earth, to foretell "the ruin of our corrupted clergy," as Milton regarded them, "then in their heighth" under Laud's primacy. Scrannel: screeching; apparently Milton's coinage (Masson). The wolf: the Puritans of the time were excited to alarm and persecution by a few conversions to Roman Catholicism which had recently occurred. Alpheus: a stream in Southern Greece, supposed to flow underseas to join the Arethuse. Swart star: the Dog-star, called swarthy because its heliacal rising in ancient times occurred soon after midsummer: rathe: early. Moist vows: either tearful prayers, or prayers for one at sea. Bellerus: a giant, apparently created here by Milton to personify Belerium, the ancient title of the Land's End. The Great Vision: — the story was that the Archangel Michael had appeared on the rock by Marazion in Mount's Bay which bears his name. Milton calls on him to turn his eyes from the south homeward, and to pity Lycidas, if his body has drifted into the troubled waters off the Land's End. Finisterre being the land due south of Marazion, two places in that district (then through our trade with Corunna probably less unfamiliar to English ears), are named, — Namancos now Mujio in Galicia, Bayona north of the Minho, or perhaps a fortified rock (one of the Cies Islands) not unlike

Saint Michael's Mount, at the entrance of Vigo Bay. Ore: rays of golden light. Doric lay: Sicilian pastoral. — P.] In later Greek literature it became a convention of poetry to place all the characters introduced in a poem in the guise or disguise of shepherds, and to imagine them engaged, not in ordinary occupations of the city or village, but in the care of flocks. Hence comes the name "pastoral poetry," from the Latin word, "pastor," a shepherd. From Greek literature this convention passed into Latin and thence into most medieval and modern European literatures. Particularly in the writing of elegies on dead poets is the convention frequently observed. Mention a number of pastoral references in Lycidas. Is it more pleasing to have Milton speak of King as a Greek shepherd than as a student at Cambridge University, England? In what other subjects is Milton interested besides the death and the fame of his friend? What are his opinions on some of these subjects? The general atmosphere of the poem is that of classical mythology: is Milton therefore to be criticized because he introduces the passage on St. Peter? What are some other references that are not Greek or Latin? What lines are especially musical? What, in your opinion, is the finest passage in the poem? Look up Ruskin's criticism of the Saint Peter passage in Sesame and Lilies. Is this criticism good or bad, in your judgment? Read also what Ruskin says about Milton's delicacy in the use of words. Explain "blind mouths" as a paradox. Why does Milton refer to the Fate that ends life as a Fury? What was the superstition as to building in an eclipse, do you suppose? Gadding is straggling, wandering. Battening is feeding. Fondly is foolishly. Glistering is glistening. Sanguine is red. Amain is forcefully. The two-handed engine is the executioner's axe. Sparely means infrequently. Rathe means early; it was, in old English, the positive degree of rather. Crow-toe and woodbine — probably our buttercup and honeysuckle. Freaked means streaked. The places mentioned in lines 162 f. are at Land's End and in Spain; and are thought of by Milton as connected with the legend that the Archangel Michael had once stood on what is now Mount Michael in Cornwall. Tricks means sets off. Uncouth means unknown.

90, 91, and 92. Which of these poems on death seems to you the best in phrasing? Which lines do you recall from any of them?

93. [The assault was an attack on London expected in 1642, when the troops of Charles I reached Brentford. "Written on his door" was in the original title of this sonnet. Milton was then living in Aldersgate Street. The Emathian Conqueror: When Thebes was destroyed (B.C. 335) and the citizens massacred by thousands, Alexander ordered the house of Pindar to be spared. — P.] How must "Colonel" be pronounced in order to keep the rhythm straight? What is the derivation of this word? Is Milton immodest to compare himself to Pindar? Are great poets usually conscious of their great powers?

94. Milton exhausted his eyes in the services of his country, becoming totally blind at the age of forty-four. For a time, naturally enough, he chafed at the idea that he could no longer be of use. How does he console himself here? Is his consolation sufficient? The grammatical construction of this sonnet needs to be considered in order to get the sense. "I fondly [foolishly] ask" is the main clause. "Ask" takes as direct object the question immediately preceding (l. 7). The verb "ask" is modified by the dependent clause at the beginning. ("When I consider." etc.) The verb "consider" in this clause itself takes as object the two other dependent clauses, introduced by "how" and by "that." The words, "But Patience," really begin a new sentence. What line in this sonnet has become famous?

95. [A fine example of a peculiar class of Poetry: — that written by thoughtful men who practised this Art but little. Jeremy Taylor, Bishop Berkeley, Dr. Johnson, Lord Macaulay, have left similar specimens. — P.]

95, 96, and 97. Write a sentence of summary showing the opinions of each of these poets as to what constitutes a virtuous man. What characters in history best fulfill the ideals of any one of them?

98. [These beautiful verses should be compared with Wordsworth's great Ode on Immortality: and a copy of Vaughan's very rare little volume appears in the list of Wordsworth's library. — In imaginative intensity, Vaughan stands beside his contemporary Marvell. — P.] It is well, as Palgrave suggests, to keep this poem in mind as a forerunner of Wordsworth's famous Ode on Intimations of Immortality from Recollections of Early Childhood, No. 338. The kernel stanza of the latter poem, the fifth, expresses essentially the same idea as does Vaughan's poem, but of course in very different language. Did Wordsworth necessarily plagiarize the idea from the elder poet? Has not every one had the impression that little children are heavenly — that about their innocence and helplessness hangs the atmosphere of another and divine world?

99. This sonnet is really a letter to a friend, asking him to appoint a time and place for a meeting. What does Milton tell you he would like to do at such a meeting? Who was Favonius?

100. This sonnet resembles the preceding, except that it conveys a definite invitation to Skinner, grandson of a famous judge and an old pupil of Milton's, to meet him and (forgetting serious matters) "to drench deep thoughts in mirth." What were Skinner's chief interests? Themis was the goddess of justice. Sweden was then at war with Poland, and France with the Spanish Netherlands.

101. Divide this poem into three parts: stanzas 1–5 (forming a single sentence), stanzas 6–16 (stating the characteristics Crashaw's ideal must possess), the remaining stanzas (asking Time to produce "that not impossible She"). What traits does Crashaw seek in his ideal woman?

102. From Cynthia's Revels.

104. From Percy's Reliques.

105. Marvell sees a picture of a little friend of his — a picture that shows the little girl on a background of flowers. He tells what thoughts the portrait suggests — that the little girl will in time be mightier than Love himself, that the poet needs to fear her eyes and power too, that while her beauty charms all verdant things she may be able to reform some errors of nature, that she must be careful not to provoke Flora to do her harm.

106. This poem reverses stanza two of the preceding poem. Sedley looks back to the young beauty's childhood, and sighs that he can no longer be as unconcerned as he was once.

109. The last two lines in this poem are probably the most famous of any written by the group of Cavalier poets.

110. Elizabeth was the daughter of James I.

111. Notice that Milton here, in the custom of the day, writes a poem to a lady — but talks mostly about her father. The Earl of Marlborough was a public official of lofty character, who was so downcast by the troubles of Charles I that he died — as did Isocrates in ancient Greece, when he heard that the Macedonians had defeated the Athenians.

113. Would Dianeme regard this poem as uncomplimentary?

115. Compare the thought of the second stanza with the fourteenth of Gray's Elegy, and with 43 in Book First.

116. The music to this poem is particularly well known. See if you can have it sung in chorus or as a solo. Notice that line 7 of the first stanza ends in "sup," not "sip," as it is often given. With what word does it rhyme?

117. In early spring the vendors of cherries would make the streets of London musical with their cry, "Cherry-ripe! Cherry-ripe!" Is this poem extravagant in its compliments? From Campion's Third and Fourth Book of Airs.

118. May First was one of the most joyous holidays of the "merrie England" of old. At dawn men and women, girls and boys would arise and hasten to the woods, there to pluck flowers and branches. With these windows and doors would be decorated, and then all day long would be celebrated the coming of the springtime. Here the poet bids Corinna make haste, that they too may be off to the woods. What quaint customs of ancient times are referred to in the poem? Do you know of any similar customs observed elsewhere? Does Herrick in his poem express any ideas that are expressed in other poems of his?

119. Do you agree with Herrick that there must be a certain careless grace, an avoidance of too obvious primness and neatness in dress? Do people pay too much attention to clothes?

123. Quarles was noted for the zeal with which he hunted for out-of-the-way and sometimes rather extraordinary figures of speech. Find some quaint figures in this poem. What do "mystical" and "ecstasy" mean? [With better taste, and less diffuseness, Quarles might (one would think) have retained more of that high place which he held in popular estimate among his contemporaries. — P.]

124. Is "Protestant" used here in the ordinary sense of the word? What is the verb from which the word was formed? How does it apply in this poem?

125. This poem is an Epigram — like 109. Define the word and show how it applies. From Wilbye's book of airs.

127. Lovelace had been cast into prison because of his loyalty to Charles I. What traits of the poet are revealed in these verses? Thames is, by synecdoche, water. [From Prison: to which his active support of Charles I twice brought the high-spirited writer. L. 7 Gods: thus in the original; Lovelace, in his fanciful way, making here a mythological allusion. Birds, commonly substituted, is without authority. St. 3, l. 1 committed; to prison. — P.]

128. How does this poem compare in sincerity with some of the other love poems of this period? Why would Neptune fittingly be called the "blue-god"?

131. Which better expresses disdain, Wither in this poem or Suckling in 129?

132. Keep this poem in mind as you read Milton's Il Penseroso. From The Nice Valour.

133. In what ways does this poem strike a new note? Is it merely the dialect that is different, or is there a distinction in the emotions expressed and in the attitude of the poet? From Percy's Reliques. Brae is hillside. Burn is brook. Busk is dress. Cramasie is crimson cloth.

135. This and the next poem are typical examples of the fine anonymous ballads with which early English literature is adorned. Note how completely removed in every respect these poems are from the characteristic poems of this age by Cowley, Dryden, Herrick, and others. It was to these ballads that nineteenth-century poets returned when they were looking for the best models. Both are from Scott's Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border. Burd is maiden. Meickle is greatest.

136. What story do the two crows tell? Mane is moan. Auld fail dyke is the old wall of turf. Hause bane is collar bone.

137. Sum up the good qualities of Hervey as Cowley sees them. [The poetical and the prosaic, after Cowley's fashion, blend curiously in this deeply-felt elegy. — P.]

140. Work out the meter and the rhyme-scheme of this poem. Compare it with Wordsworth's poem, 301.

141. Marvell has been called "the poet of gardens." Show, from this and the succeeding poem, that he deserves the title. What especially beautiful lines occur in these poems? [Perhaps no poem in this collection is more delicately fancied, more exquisitely finished. By placing his description of the Fawn in a young girl's mouth, Marvell has, as it were, legitimated that abundance of "imaginative hyperbole" to which he is always partial: he makes us feel it natural that a maiden's favourite should be whiter than milk, sweeter than sugar — "lilies without, roses within." The poet's imagination is justified in its seeming extravagance by the intensity and unity with which it invests his picture. — P.]

143. The title means "More than Happy." Tutties are nosegays. Crabs are crab-apples. Silly means simple. Notice how some of the details of this poem are duplicated in Milton's poems immediately following.

144 and 145. These twin-poems by Milton produced an immense train of imitations, especially in the earlier part of the romantic period; and aside from direct imitations they have also deeply influenced all succeeding poets interested in landscape description. Milton carefully interlocked and interwove his two poems. It should be understood from the start that he had in mind not two men of diverse moods, but rather the same man in different moods. The titles tell what these moods are: cheerfulness and pensiveness. In these moods the poet has a series of experiences, and one poem is the complement of the other. Draw up a table showing these parallels and resemblances. Make a list of references to Greek mythology — to classical writers — to writers other than those of Greece and Rome. What are some striking personifications that Milton introduces? What references to music do you find? Where does Milton mention quaint customs of his own time? What lines present very striking images? Where is the poet onomatopoetic? Find an example of paradox. Where are there touches of humor? Where is use made of the superstitions of Milton's time? What religious references occur? What are some good figures of speech? What is the meter of the poems? Does it vary? What lines or passages do you like best? Why?

144. Cerberus was the three-headed dog who guarded the entrance to the underworld. Stygian from Styx, river of Hades. Uncouth, unknown. Yclept, called. Euphrosyne was one of the three Graces. Venus, goddess of love. Bacchus, god of wine. Zephyr, god of the west wind. Aurora, goddess of dawn. Milton means that cheerfulness, in the case of some, is born of love and wine; in the case of others (who are sager) of walking in the early morning, when the west wind blows. Debonair, of good bearing. What is the derivation of this word? Tells his tale means counts his sheep. Lawns, an open stretch of country. Cynosure, object of attention: look up the derivation of this word. Corydon and Thyrsis are conventional names of shepherds. Bower, a cottage. Secure, free from care. Rebeck, a fiddle. Junkets, delicacies. The Goblin performed hard tasks for the household during the night, and expected his pay in the shape of a bowl of cream. Weeds, clothing. Hymen was the god of marriage; his symbol was a taper-torch. Jonson was a learned writer of the age of Shakespeare, whose great rival he was. In the time of the Greeks, comic actors wore a soccus, or low slipper; tragic actors a buskin, or half-boot. Among the Greeks there were three kinds of music — the serious Dorian, the sprightly Phrygian, and the soft Lydian. Notice the contradiction between noun and adjective in "wanton heed" and "giddy cunning." What was the myth of Orpheus and Eurydice? Quite, entirely.

145. Bested, avail or profit. Pensioners, followers. Morpheus, god of dreams. Prince Memnon was ruler of the Ethiopians, and hence dark of hue: Milton invents a sister for him and imagines her as being of great beauty. Starred Ethiop queen — Cassiopeia, who claimed that her beauty was greater than that of the sea-nymphs. Her daughter was Andromeda, rescued by Perseus from the monster whom the nymphs sent to punish her mother. The latter, on her death, was raised to the stars. Saturn was ruler of the gods in the Golden Age; he was overthrown by his son Jove. Vesta was goddess of the home. Grain, a red or purple color. Cypress lawn, a kind of fine cloth. What contradiction of ideas is there in the line about "spare Fast"? Commercing, holding communion with. For a probable explanation of the cherub Contemplation, see in the Bible the Book of Ezekiel, chapter x. Philomel, the nightingale. Plight — a doubtful word, that may mean condition, or mood, or strain of music. Cynthia, another name for Artemis or Diana, goddess of the moon. Possibly the "accustomed oak" was that under which her lover, Endymion, slept in a magic sleep forever; or the oak above which Milton often watched the moon. The Bellman was the watchman of Milton's time, who announced the hours and the weather. The Bear, the Great Bear, or Dipper. Thrice-great Hermes was Hermes Trismegistus (thrice-great), a mythical Egyptian king, supposed author of several philosophical works. Plato, a great Greek philosopher, whom Milton calls back from the sphere of the other or after world by reading his books. The pall, like the buskin, was worn by tragic actors. Thebes, Pelops, Troy — famous stories of Greek mythology. Musæus, son of Orpheus, and earliest Greek poet. Chaucer did not complete, in the "Canterbury Tales," the adventures of the Tartar king, Cambuscan. Great bards. Perhaps Milton had especially in mind Spenser, Ariosto, and Tasso. Can you think of any poems you have read "where more is meant than meets the ear"? Civil-suited, civilian (as opposed to military) garb. Attic boy, Cephalus, whom Aurora loved, and whom she went to meet in her brightest colors. Sylvan, god of the woods. Cloister, probably a place both of education and of religious worship. Dight, clad, adorned. Hairy gown, such as a hermit wore for penance.

146. Where, do you suppose, did Marvell get the details for this poem? Is it true to fact? What lines are especially rich? The emigrants are supposed to be Puritan refugees, driven towards America by Charles I's government. The prelate, or church officer, is Laud, who persecuted the Puritans.

147. How could you tell from this poem that Milton was very fond of music, and knew much of its technique? Diapason is the range of notes. Consort is agreement, harmony.

148. The title, a translation of a phrase in the Psalms, means "Night unto night showeth knowledge." How does the title fit the poem? Which do you prefer, this or either of the two poems immediately following? Why?

150. Noteworthy as an attempt to translate the abstract into the concrete.

151. Poets love to practice the art of onomatopœia on a large scale — perhaps the best example is Poe's The Bells; but compare as well Gray's The Progress of Poesy, 177, and Collins's The Passions, 178. In the present poem Dryden writes a narrative showing how music and poetry may compel all emotions; and in the telling he lets the sound convey the sense. Where in your opinion is he most successful in the use of this device? What lines of the poem have become especially famous? Which passage would be most forceful if well recited? Is Dryden more successful here or in 86?

BOOK THIRD

152. What does "vicissitude" mean? What is the pleasure, according to Gray, that arises from it? Compare the pictures that Gray calls up in this poem with those in any poem by Milton or Marvell. Which are more concrete?

153. [We have no poet more marked by rapture, by the ecstasy which Plato held the note of genuine instruction, than Collins. Yet but twice or thrice do his lyrics reach that simplicity, that sinceram sermon Attici gratiam to which this ode testifies his enthusiastic devotion. His style, as his friend Johnson truly remarks, was obscure; his diction often harsh and unskilfully laboured; he struggled nobly against the narrow, artificial manner of his style, but his too scanty years did not allow him to reach perfect mastery. — P.]

154. Would Pope, from what you know of him, really have been content with a life of this sort, or is he only speaking allegorically?

156. What phrases in this poem are especially good? What does Gray mean by the last line of the next to the last stanza?

159. How many stanzas has this poem? See if you can work out the scheme on which the stanzas are arranged. Counting the number of lines in each stanza will help you. How much of the story can you gather? What had Edward I the English king done? [Glo'ster: Gilbert de Clare, son-in-law to Edward. Mortimer, one of the Lords Marchers of Wales. High-born Hoel, soft Llewellyn; the Dissertatio de Bardis of Evans names the first as son to the King Owain Gwynedd: Llewellyn, last King of North Wales, was murdered 1282. Cadwallo: Cadwallon (died 631) and Urien Rheged (early kings of Gwynedd and Cumbria respectively) are mentioned by Evans (p. 78) as bards none of whose poetry is extant. Modred: Evans supplies no data for this name which Gray (it has been supposed) uses for Merlin (Myrddin Wyllt), held prophet as well as poet. — The italicized lines mark where the Bard's song is joined by that of his predecessors departed. Arvon: the shores of Carnarvonshire opposite Anglesey. Whether intentionally or through ignorance of the real dates, Gray here seems to represent the Bard as speaking of these poets, all of earlier days, Llewellyn excepted, as his own contemporaries at the close of the thirteenth century. Gray, whose penetrating and powerful genius rendered him in many ways an initiator in advance of his age, is probably the first of our poets who made some acquaintance with the rich and admirable poetry in which Wales from the sixth century has been fertile, — before and since his time so barbarously neglected, not in England only. Hence it has been thought worth while here to enter into a little detail upon his Cymric allusions. She-wolf: Isabel of France, adulterous Queen of Edward II. — Towers of Julius: the Tower of London, built in part, according to tradition, by Julius Cæsar. Bristled boar: the badge of Richard III. Half of thy heart: Queen Eleanor died soon after the conquest of Wales. Arthur: Henry VII named his eldest son thus, in deference to native feeling and story. — P.]

160. Would the sentiment of this poem apply as well to any other soldiers, of any other country? To what senses does Collins appeal? What personifications does he employ?

161. Which "lament" do you prefer, this or the one that follows? Why? [The Highlanders called the battle of Culloden, Drumossie. — P.]

162. [lilting, singing blithely: loaning, broad lane: bughts, pens: scorning, rallying: dowie, dreary: daffin' and gabbin', joking and chatting: leglin, milkpail: shearing, reaping: bandsters, sheaf-binders: lyart, grizzled: runkled, wrinkled: fleeching, coaxing: gloaming, twilight: bogle, ghost: dool, sorrow. — P.]

163. Which, in your judgment, better brings out the pathos of the situation and tells its story more effectively, this or the next poem? Why?

164. [The Editor has found no authoritative text of this poem, to his mind superior to any other of its class in melody and pathos. Part is probably not later than the seventeenth century: in other stanzas a more modern hand, much resembling Scott's, is traceable. Logan's poem (163) exhibits a knowledge rather of the old legend than of the old verses. — Hecht, promised; the obsolete, hight: mavis, thrush: ilka, every: lav'rock, lark: haughs, valley-meadows: twined, parted from: marrow, mate: syne, then. — P.]

165. [The Royal George, of 108 guns, whilst undergoing a partial careening at Spithead, was overset about 10 A.M. Aug. 29, 1782. The total loss was believed to be nearly 1000 souls. — This little poem might be called one of our trial-pieces, in regard to taste. The reader who feels the vigour of description and the force of pathos underlying Cowper's bare and truly Greek simplicity of phrase, may assure himself se valde profecisse in poetry. — P.]

167. [A little masterpiece in a very difficult style: Catullus himself could hardly have bettered it. In grace, tenderness, simplicity, and humour, it is worthy of the Ancients: and even more so, from the completeness and unity of the picture presented. — P.]

171. Compare this poem with Campion's Sleep, Angry Beauty, 52.

172. [Perhaps no writer who has given such strong proofs of the poetic nature has left less satisfactory poetry than Thomson. Yet this song, with Rule Britannia and a few others, must make us regret that he did not more seriously apply himself to lyrical writing. — P.]

174. Blake's poems always mean more than they seem to mean, and are charged with a mystic significance. What does Blake intend to tell you here? [With what insight and tenderness, yet in how few words, has this painter-poet here himself told Love's Secret! — P.]

176. Who is supposed to speak the words of this poem, a man or a woman? Does the dialect trouble you at all?

177. As was pointed out in the comment on Dryden's Alexander's Feast, 151, Gray here aims at skillful onomatopœia, and often makes the sound convey the sense. The subject-matter of this poem is important, inasmuch as Gray here gives in brief space a rapid survey of the origin, the effects, and the history of poetry. Is his treatment adequate? What countries, besides Greece and England, does he mention? Explain his references to Greek mythology. What personifications does he employ? Are they interesting in themselves? Does he give a convincing criticism of Shakespeare? of Milton? What epigram occurs in his description of the latter poet? Do you like his picture of Dryden? What, do you suppose, were "the two coursers"? [Æolian lyre: the Greeks ascribed the origin of their Lyrical Poetry to the Colonies of Æolis in Asia Minor. Thracia's hills: supposed a favourite resort of Mars. Feather'd king: the Eagle of Jupiter, admirably described by Pindar in a passage here imitated by Gray. Idalia: in Cyprus, where Cytherea (Venus) was especially worshipped. Hyperion: the Sun. St. 6-8 allude to the Poets of the Islands and Mainland of Greece, to those of Rome and of England. Theban Eagle: Pindar. — P.]

178. Compare this poem with Dryden's two poems on Saint Cecilia's Day, 86 and 151, and with the opening passages of Gray's The Progress of Poesy, 177. Are Collins's personifications more or less pleasing and successful than those of Gray? Which poet uses the more concrete images? Which has the more striking lines? What is the finest passage of the poem? Why?

179. [From that wild rhapsody of mingled grandeur, tenderness, and obscurity, that "medley between inspiration and possession," which poor Smart is believed to have written whilst in confinement for madness. — P.] How is the last stanza related to the first two?

181. Compare this poem with A Sweet Lullaby, 57, and with Upon My Lap, 134.

182 and 183. Which of these two poems better expresses the idea of the frailty of man and of his joys? The Attic warbler is the nightingale.

184. [sleekit, sleek: bickering brattle, flittering flight: laith, loth: pattle, ploughstaff: whyles, at times: a daimenicker, a corn-ear now and then: thrave, shock: lave, rest: foggage, after-grass: snell, biting: but hald, without dwelling-place: thole, bear: cranreuch, hoar-frost: thy lane, alone: a-gley, off the right line, awry. — P.] Why has this poem become so famous? What spirit in Burns does it reveal? Is he sincere in what he says in the last stanza? Which line is especially well known?

185. Compare this poem with A Wish, 83, and with Solitude, 154. Which is the most sincere of these poems?

186. This poem is noteworthy in that it does not rhyme but is nevertheless arranged in stanza form. In a general way it imitates some of the ode-forms of Horace. The poem is one of very delicate beauty, and needs careful study — line by line conning — if it is to be truly appreciated. Try to call up the pictures that Collins suggests. Notice with what care he limns in his details, and how accurate they are. See how he appeals to both sight and sound. Watch for occasional use of onomatopœia. Study his personifications. It was through poems like this that the coming romantic era was prepared for.

187. This is probably the most celebrated short poem ever written in any language. It has been rendered innumerable times into almost all the languages of man, living or dead; and of it General Wolfe, the conqueror of Quebec, once said that he would rather have written it than capture that city. It is consequently well to inquire: What has won for this poem such immense fame? Why has it attracted so many kinds and conditions of men? Is it the smoothness and felicity of the style? Is it the sympathy and kindliness of the sentiments expressed? To what universal feelings does it appeal? If you had suffered a bereavement or were in fear of death, would the poem soothe you? In many ways the poem expresses the new romantic views that reached full flower in the next century. It shows a new sympathy with men and women, especially those of humble life; it shows a similar sympathy for children, for the creatures of the wilds; it observes nature closely; it makes use of what was then a somewhat novel stanza form — most poets of that age employed the heroic couplet. What lines or passages in the poem do you particularly like?

188. Compare this and the following poems by Burns inscribed to women with some of those of the preceding century — by Sedley, Carew, Herrick, Waller, Lovelace, and Suckling, for example. Which are more sincere? more pleasingly written? more musical? [stoure, dust-storm; braw, smart. — P.]

189. [scaith, hurt: tent, guard: steer, molest. — P.]

191. [drumlie, muddy: birk, birch. —P.]

192. [greet, cry: daurna, dare not. — There can hardly exist a poem more truly tragic in the highest sense than this: nor, perhaps, Sappho excepted, has any Poetess equalled it. — P.]

193. [fou, merry with drink: coost, carried: unco skeigh, very proud: gart, forced: abeigh, aside: Ailsa craig, a rock in the Firth of Clyde: grat his een bleert, cried till his eyes were bleared: lowpin, leaping: linn, waterfall: sair, sore: smoor'd, smothered: crouse and canty, blithe and gay. — P.]

194. [Burns justly named this "one of the most beautiful songs in the Scots or any other language." One stanza, interpolated by Beattie, is here omitted: — it contains two good lines, but is out of harmony with the original poem. Bigonet, little cap; probably altered from béguinette: thraw, twist: caller, fresh. — P.]

195. [Burns himself, despite two attempts, failed to improve this little absolute masterpiece of music, tenderness, and simplicity: this "Romance of a life" in eight lines. — Eerie: strictly, scared, uneasy. — P.]

196. [airts, quarters: row, roll: shaw, small wood in a hollow, spinney: knowes, knolls. The last two stanzas are not by Burns. — P.]

197. [jo, sweetheart: brent, smooth: pow, head. — P.]

198. [leal, faithful. St. 3 fain, happy. — P.]

199. Eton is a famous preparatory school in England, which has been attended by some very famous men. It was founded by Henry VI. Does what Gray says here about schoolboys really apply to them? How is the sentiment expressed in the last nine words of the poems given a wrong significance if only the most famous three words are quoted?

200. [Written in 1773, towards the beginning of Cowper's second attack of melancholy madness — a time when he altogether gave up prayer, saying, "For him to implore mercy would only anger God the more." Yet had he given it up when sane, it would have been "maior insania." — P.]

202. What famous story was suggested by the adventures of Selkirk?

203. [The Editor would venture to class in the very first rank this

Sonnet, which, with 204, records Cowper's gratitude to the Lady whose affectionate care for many years gave what sweetness he could enjoy to a life radically wretched. Petrarch's sonnets have a more ethereal grace and a more perfect finish; Shakespeare's more passion; Milton's stand supreme in stateliness; Wordsworth's in depth and delicacy. But Cowper's unites with an exquisiteness in the turn of thought which the ancients would have called Irony, an intensity of pathetic tenderness peculiar to his loving and ingenuous nature. — There is much mannerism, much that is unimportant or of now exhausted interest in his poems: but where he is great, it is with that elementary greatness which rests on the most universal human feelings. Cowper is our highest master in simple pathos. — P.]

205. Cowper's life was a very unhappy one, and over him hung constantly the cloud of insanity. In this poem he is really speaking of himself. Show how the thoughts of the poem apply to him.

206. What would you wish for, in place of the things here listed by Collins?

BOOK FOURTH

208. Palgrave places this melodious lament of Blake's at the beginning of his Fourth Book, as if to show that the Muses indeed answered the poet's cry. The poem itself is a forerunner of the romantic movement and was a model for its style. [This beautiful lyric, printed in 1783, seems to anticipate in its imaginative music that return to our great early age of song, which in Blake's own lifetime was to prove, — how gloriously! that the English Muses had resumed their "ancient melody": — Keats, Shelley, Byron, — he overlived them all. — P.]

209. Keats wrote this poem on a fly-leaf of a volume containing Beaumont and Fletcher's play, The Fair Maid of the Inn. Presumably he has in mind chiefly these twin-poets (see the section of biographical data, page 407 and page 413), but what he says applies almost equally well to other poets. He thinks of the two forms of immortality a poet may have — a personal life in the Elysian Fields of the after-world and the fame of his works in this world. What odd but enticing fancies does Keats introduce? What lines are especially melodious?

210. Chapman was a contemporary of Shakespeare and is supposed by some students of the age of Elizabeth to have been intimately connected, as friend and foe, with that writer's life. Besides plays he wrote a massive translation of Homer, and his rendering in some respects gives a better idea of the original than any other version we have in English. Keats came across a volume of this translation one evening and was immediately entranced; this sonnet, the first of his great poems, was found written on a fly-leaf of the volume. What does he mean by traveling? Where are the "western islands"? How is "demesne" pronounced, and what other word does it resemble in appearance and meaning? What historical mistake did Keats make? What does "stout" mean? What are the finest lines in the sonnet? It may be noticed, that to find in Chapman's Homer the "pure serene" of the original, the reader must bring with him the imagination of the youthful poet; — he must be "a Greek himself," as Shelley finely said of Keats. — P.]

212. What kind of rhymes does Byron use throughout? [The most tender and true of Byron's smaller poems. — P.]

213. [This poem exemplifies the peculiar skill with which Scott employs proper names: — a rarely misleading sign of true poetical genius. — P.]

215. This is one of the most beautiful love lyrics in the language. It is filled with the energy of passion, but for those interested in the technique of verbal music, it offers the opportunity for fascinating study. Notice, for example, how the number of syllables to a line changes with the mood, and how Shelley makes a pause for emphasis take the place of syllables.

216. This poem was written about a relative of Byron's, who appeared at a ball one evening in mourning, her dress covered with black spangles. It is a tribute to beauty and purity.

217. Wordsworth's wife is the subject of this fine tribute. Notice how his ideal woman is more than merely beautiful; she is also, in her sphere, useful; she is one to whose sway and command he is willing to yield. This poem was written later than those about Lucy — 220 to 223 — and it is interesting to see how Wordsworth's view of woman has changed from something purely ethereal to something more practical.

220. Wordsworth wrote these famous Lucy poems while he was residing in Germany — note the opening line of 221. Who Lucy was no one has ever been able to discover, but the story of her life is sufficiently told in these four poems.

222. In this poem lies implicit much of the philosophy of life which animated Wordsworth's poetry from about 1797 until 1807 — the period when Coleridge was intimate with him, and when he was deeply influenced by those doctrines of transcendentalism which Coleridge had imbibed from Kant and other German sources. Transcendentalism has many technical meanings and aspects, but it may briefly be summed up as signifying those truths accepted by the human mind which are not derived from experience — those ideas which we accept as true even if we cannot prove them. Some of the axioms of geometry are of this character; for example, the idea that the whole is greater than any of its parts. Transcendentalism consequently places the emphasis not on reason, but on intuition; and it believes that we can arrive at truth concerning God, the universe, and man by means of intuition, of the affections, of the impulses. In the matter of education, therefore, it is less important to study books than it is to go out into the world of nature and let the impulses of God seep into one's being — as Lucy is allowed to do in this poem. Nature to her is both "law and impulse" — that is, both restraint and liberty: freedom of action within the bounds set by God, nature teaching both. By constant communion with nature she acquires both moral and physical health; she becomes graceful by watching the motions of the storm and beautiful by listening to murmuring water — Wordsworth often speaks of the appeal the sound of water made to him. Do you agree with Wordsworth? Does a life in the open give a person what we call manliness and womanliness? Would such a life better produce loveliness than paint, powder, and perfume? What lines make a special appeal to you?

223. The poet tells how the very beauty of Lucy made him feel that she could never know decay and death. Then she died; and now his imagination feels that she has been sealed up in the dizzying immortality of the swinging earth. See how long it takes you to memorize this poem.

224. The opening lines are a little vague. Apparently the poet is thinking of a dead sweetheart, and seems to see her face. The fourth and fifth stanzas are very much superior in merit to the rest of the poem.

226. Is this Lucy, do you suppose, the same as the Lucy of 220 and the following poems? [Simple as Lucy Gray seems, a mere narrative of what "has been, and may be again," yet every touch in the child's picture is marked by the deepest and purest ideal character. Hence, pathetic as the situation is, this is not strictly a pathetic poem, such as Wordsworth gives us in 221, Lamb in 264, and Scott in his Maid of Neidpath — "almost more pathetic," as Tennyson once remarked, "than a man has the right to be." And Lyte's lovely stanzas (224) suggest, perhaps, the same remark. — P.]

228. Summarize Shelley's philosophy of love in a sentence. Is it better to state this idea baldly or to beautify it, as Shelley has done, with figures of speech and with melody?

232. In this as in 215 Shelley with consummate skill makes the verse respond to his emotion in a way that repays most careful study. Shelley never wrote lines more beautiful than some of those in this poem: pick out those that seem to you especially fine. As you read the poem, keep in mind always that it is a love poem, not a description of nature. You will then better understand the images that Shelley calls up.

234. How does the metrical movement of this poem add emphasis to the meaning?

235. [In this and in other instances the addition (or the change) of a Title has been risked, in hope that the aim of the piece following may be grasped more clearly and immediately. — P.]

237. By most commentators this poem is taken to refer to Keats's unhappy love affair with Fanny Brawne. She is "the beautiful, pitiless lady" of the title; and the poet thinks of her as many legends and poems have pictured this type — as a Delilah, as a Siren, as the Lorelei, as the "Vampire" of Kipling's famous poem, as the Venus of the Tannhäuser story.

240. Could this poem, do you think, be made the basis of a short story? Would it lose by such a transformation? Which telling of the story is better, that by Scott or that by Campbell, 241?

242. This was the last sonnet written by Keats, inscribed in a fly-leaf of a volume of Shakespeare's Sonnets and appropriately written in the Shakespearean sonnet form. Two lines in this poem have become especially famous: which do you suppose they are? [This beautiful Sonnet was the last word of a youth, in whom, if the fulfilment may ever safely be prophesied from the promise, England lost one of the most rarely gifted in the long roll of her poets. Shakespeare and Milton, had their lives been closed at twenty-five, would (so far as we know) have left poems of less excellence and hope than the youth who, from the petty school and the London surgery, passed at once to a place with them of "high collateral glory." — P.]

244. Wordsworth is thinking of a daughter who had died at an early age.

245. [It is impossible not to regret that Moore has written so little in this sweet and genuinely national style. — P.]

246. [A masterly example of Byron's command of strong thought and close reasoning in verse: — as the next is equally characteristic of Shelley's wayward intensity. — P.]

251. As part of England's war against Napoleon and the allies, active or passive, who were assisting him, a fleet was sent against Copenhagen which destroyed the Danish fleet and effectively broke up an alliance against England. Nelson was second in command of the British fleet.

252. This poem was composed in 1807, towards the end of the decade of fertility in Wordsworth's poetry — it is later, therefore, than most of the other poems by Wordsworth which follow it in THE GOLDEN TREASURY. In some respects it is almost a farewell to poetry, for in it the poet renounces those transcendental doctrines (see the comment on The Education of Nature, 222) which had been his during the period when Coleridge's influence was paramount in his life. Now he turns to Duty. He looks back with regret to the days when the "genial sense of youth" was sufficient reliance; when love was "an unerring light," when joy was "its own security." But now this "unchartered freedom" tires him, for he feels that too blindly has he reposed his trust; and he seeks the "confidence of reason." But as he turns to Duty he hymns her benignant grace and her loveliness; and he sees Law, the expression of Duty, as that which preserves the stars and keeps the heavens fresh and strong. In some respects the poem recalls Gray's Hymn to Adversity, 201, but it is more pathetic, more sublime, more beautiful. Which stanza is the finest?

253. For a fuller account of the hero of this sonnet read Byron's The Prisoner of Chillon, which tells about a man who suffered for freedom. [Bonnivard, a Genevese, was imprisoned by the Duke of Savoy in Chillon on the lake of Geneva for his courageous defence of his country against the tyranny with which Piedmont threatened it during the first half of the seventeenth century. — This noble Sonnet is worthy to stand near Milton's on the Vaudois massacre. — P.]

254. Gather from this and the four following sonnets Wordsworth's feelings toward England and his idea of the character of his own age. Which of all the lines in these poems has become most famous? Which gives you the most vivid picture? the finest figure of speech? [Switzerland was usurped by the French under Napoleon in 1800: Venice in 1797 (255). — P.]

259. This poem describes a battle between the French and the Austrians. It took place near Munich.

261. The title is taken from a Latin saying that "it is sweet and fitting to die for one's native land." Superficially this poem seems a light love lyric; in reality it is a patriotic poem — words supposed to be spoken by Robert Emmet, the Irish patriot.

262. [After the capture of Madrid by Napoleon, Sir J. Moore retreated before Soult and Ney to Corunna, and was killed whilst covering the embarkation of his troops. — P.]

264. Recently what is known as "free verse" has had a great many practitioners, and some of them have supposed that this type of poetry, in which rhyme is usually missing altogether and in which the rhythm is "free," that is, without meter, was a complete novelty, of recent invention. But so far back as Milton examples of this kind of poetry may be found; and in Anglo-Saxon verse, in the medieval poets, Sir John Skelton and William Langland, and in others there are hints of free verse. In the nineteenth century Matthew Arnold and Tennyson occasionally wrote such verse; and this poem by Lamb is as fine an example as one can find of poetry with irregular rhythm. How do the facts of Lamb's life justify his lament?

266. Was Byron necessarily an old man when he wrote this poem? Would it be justified at the age of twenty-seven?

268. To remember their childhood has always been a favorite exercise of poets — culminating in Wordsworth's great Ode on Immortality which is the climax of this Fourth Book. Keep in mind when you come to the latter poem the last two lines of this poem — in which Hood states over again Wordsworth's central idea.

270. Often in Shelley's work one finds a deep note of dejection, due for most part to the fact that his poems for so long a period went without due appreciation from the public, and that his efforts for mankind's regeneration seemed so fruitless. It was not indeed until some years after his death that the public understood how great a poet Shelley was; this was true, too, of Keats. In this poem Shelley relates how to a certain extent the mild beauty of the landscape he describes relieves his melancholy. Is stanza two an adequate picture of the ocean shore? What phrases in this picture are especially fine? How does the last stanza give an unconscious prophecy of Shelley's death? The last stanza of his lament for Keats, Adonais, gives, incidentally, a similar prophecy.

271. Southey here gives expression to an emotion concerning books that many have felt. The famous historian Gibbon once remarked: "My early and invincible love of reading I would not exchange for the wealth of the Indies." See if you can find other tributes to books.

272. In the Mermaid Tavern often gathered many of the wits of the Elizabethan Age, and there they engaged in many a bout of drinking and repartee. One account in particular tells how Shakespeare and Ben Jonson would frequently meet in verbal combat, the former generally emerging as victor. Keats imagines these lusty poets continuing in the life after death in the same occupations, at a divine tavern.

273. Within a few lines Scott has compressed a whole story. What word in the first line gives you the key to the plot? [Maisie: Mary. — Scott has given us nothing more complete and lovely than this little song, which unites simplicity and dramatic power to a wild-wood music of the rarest quality. No moral is drawn, far less any conscious analysis of feeling attempted: — the pathetic meaning is left to be suggested by the mere presentment of the situation. A narrow criticism has often named this, which may be called the Homeric manner, superficial, from its apparent simple facility; but first-rate excellence in it is in truth one of the least common triumphs of Poetry. — This style should be compared with what is not less perfect in its way, the searching out of inner feeling, the expression of hidden meanings, the revelation of the heart of Nature and of the Soul within the Soul, — the analytical method, in short, — most completely represented by Wordsworth and by Shelley. — P.]

274. A certain bridge over the Thames River in London was sometimes called the "Bridge of Sighs" because from it so many unfortunate men and women leaped into the river to commit suicide. Of one of these unfortunates Hood writes with indignation and sympathy. His poem is technically noteworthy because he employs double and even triple rhymes — usually reserved for humorous effects.

277. [Wolfe resembled Keats, not only in his early death by consumption and the fluent freshness of his poetical style, but in beauty of character: — brave, tender, energetic, unselfish, modest. Is it fanciful to find some reflex of these qualities in the Burial and Mary? Out of the abundance of the heart . . . — P.]

278. [correi: covert on a hillside. Cumber: trouble. — P.]

279. Again Hood, primarily a humorous poet, shows his ability to write beautiful serious poems. In Palgrave's first edition of THE GOLDEN TREASURY he omitted the third stanza, as not worthy of the rest of the poem; later he restored it. Was he right?

280. [This book has not a few poems of greater power and more perfect execution than Agnes and the extract which we have ventured to make from the deep-hearted author's Sad Thoughts (No. 224). But none are more emphatically marked by the note of exquisiteness. — P.]

281. [St. 3 inch: island. — P.]

282. The infant was Hood's, an intimate friend of Lamb. Can you think of any essays by Lamb which this poem resembles or recalls?

283. [From Poetry for Children, by Charles and Mary Lamb. — P.]

286. This is one of the few poems of Wordsworth's later years that have attained immortality; and it is among the noblest of his writings. Note how it mounts steadily to a climax in the last stanza, which contains two particularly beautiful lines.

287. As an undertone there sounds throughout this poem the poet's melancholy, made all the more poignant by contrast with the ecstatic happiness of the skylark. Does the poet actually describe the sound of the lark's song? Does "shrill delight" express a paradox, or self-contradiction? Is the evening light ever purple? To what does he compare the lark? How many different words does he use for "hidden"? Is the paradox of the stanza beginning "We look before and after" one that you accept? Where does the poet tell you what the real trouble in his own mind is? Compare the last stanza with the third of the Stanzas Written in Dejection, 270. Does Shelley draw the same lesson or thought from the skylark as did Wordsworth in 286?

289. [This poem has an exultation and a glory, joined with an exquisiteness of expression, which place it in the highest rank among the many masterpieces of its illustrious Author. — P.]

290. In studying this poem it is important to keep in mind the fact that (as in Shelley's Ode to a Skylark) there is present throughout a poignant contrast between the happiness of the bird and the melancholy of the poet. Keats, however, expresses his dejection much more definitely than did Shelley, and it had indeed a more definite cause — the recent death of his brother. In what line does he refer to this bereavement? To rid himself of the sorrow of this passing away Keats turns to two solaces. First, he seeks the consolation of alcohol; but this he finds inadequate and unavailing. So he cries to the nightingale that he will fly to her, not "charioted by Bacchus and his pards," but on the wings of the imagination. For a time this helps; and in the rapidly darkening twilight of mid-May, surrounded by the fragrance of the hawthorn, the eglantine, and other early blossoms, he sinks into a mood when it seems almost happiness to die. As he ponders, the song of the bird becomes to him an eternal symbol of art, heard forever through the ages, and he mounts to the magnificent climax of the seventh stanza. But not even imagination is able to win him away from his grief; and soon far in the distance fades the song of the bird. Kipling has spoken of this as the loveliest short poem in the language. To appreciate it fully one must see that it has not merely beautiful lines and lovely images, but a definite outline of thought. Every word in it deserves the most careful study — for example, hemlock, opiate, drains, Lethe, Dryad, draught, Flora, Provençal, beaker, Hippocrene, palsy, lustrous, Bacchus, pards (it does not mean what you think it means), poesy, fays, verdurous, embalmed, pastoral, mused, ecstasy, requiem, Ruth, alien, casements, forlorn, elf, plaintive, anthem, and others.

291. Wordsworth loved nature and hated "the din of cities." In what way is this poem not inconsistent with the latter dislike? Have other poets since Wordsworth's day learned to appreciate the poetry of cities?

293. What lesson does Shelley try to teach?

297. Which poem, this or the next, do you like better? Why? In both poems, you will notice, Wordsworth expresses a favorite idea of his, that it is well to impress on the memory beautiful images of sight and sound, so that in time of distress and grief the recollection of them may soothe and comfort one.

298. One critic maintains that in this poem may be found a passage of four lines that are the very apex of English poetic style. Which lines, do you suppose, deserve this high praise? Do you agree, or can you think of other lines, perhaps in THE GOLDEN TREASURY, that seem to you better than anything in this poem?

300. Shelley apparently often thought of himself under the image of the gay spirit who in Shakespeare's The Tempest serves for a time Prospero's wishes on land and in the air. Maurois, a French novelist, has written a vivid biography of Shelley under the name of "Ariel." To understand the first part of this poem it may be well to reread rapidly the play by Shakespeare. In the second part Shelley invents a myth to account for the invention of the guitar. Was it easy to write this poem in these short lines? Where is Shelley especially successful in expressing himself with beauty and melody?

301. Note how in the last stanza Wordsworth once more expresses one of his favorite ideas. Which part of the poem gives you the most vivid picture?

302. Similes, as the introduction has pointed out, are an important device of poets, who see one thing in the similitude of another and perceive comparisons that the hasty onlooker often misses. In this poem Wordsworth, as he himself says, "plays with similes." Make a list of his comparisons. Can you add any?

303. No other poem, even of Keats's own writing, better exhibits the poet's keenness of senses than does this. In the first stanza Keats calls up images of sight, touch, and taste; in the second stanza of sight, touch, and smell; in the third stanza of sight, sound, and touch. Give illustrations. If a painter were given a commission to paint figures for four panels based on stanza two, what would the figures look like? Which lines are onomatopoetic? Compare this poem, in vividness and interest, with Gray's Ode on the Spring, 182.

304. Explain all the proper nouns in this poem. [Calpe: Gibraltar. Lofoden: the Maelstrom whirlpool off the N.W. coast of Norway. — P.]

305. The poem records a dialogue with the poet's sister, Dorothy Wordsworth. Was he wrong to visit the place, as the next poem records? What did he gain?

307. What other poem by Shelley does this poem recall? Does Shelley mean you to think of it?

309. At Dover. The "child" is Wordsworth's daughter.

310. There is a famous song by Richard Wagner with the same name. If you know the music to this, tell whether it would also be appropriate to Campbell's poem.

311. The title means: "To quiet is given the hour."

315. [Arcturi: Southern stars. — P.]

316. Once Coleridge fell asleep and in his slumber composed a wonderful poem. Awakening, he hastily seized paper and pencil and started to write down the lines, but a visitor on business came in and interrupted him. When he had gone, the rest of the poem had disappeared from his memory. But what remains is one of the most musical and imaginative poems in the language. Read it aloud to get its full effect. It is almost pure music. [Coleridge describes this poem as the fragment of a dream-vision, — perhaps, an opium-dream? — which composed itself in his mind when fallen asleep after reading a few lines about "the Khan Kubla" in Purchas' Pilgrimage. — P.]

318. Can your fancy do what Keats makes his do? Is he right in what he says in the final passage? What lines show an eye for form and color like that of a painter? Ceres' daughter is Proserpina. The god of torment is Pluto.

320. Is Wordsworth's picture of America true?

322. Once more it is necessary to remember, as one reads this great lyric of Shelley, that throughout he is thinking of nature in terms of himself. More definitely than in To a Skylark he tells the reader why he is gloomy: the last stanza is a pretty complete statement of his trouble. So he addresses the West Wind as the forerunner of winter: the poem is practically an Ode to Autumn, but vastly different from Keats's Ode to Autumn. In the first stanza it is the West Wind dealing with the leaves that he considers; in the second stanza he watches the West Wind making havoc in the air; in the third stanza it is in the waves that he watches the devastating progress of the West Wind. Then he turns to himself, and in the fourth stanza expresses his regrets and his yearnings, in the filth stanza his aspirations and his hope. Study each stanza carefully. Summarize each stanza in a sentence. What lines have become famous? What is a Maenad? Can moss be azure? Is Shelley's description of himself in the last line of stanza four correct? Is the grammar of "Be thou me, impetuous one" correct? What stanza form does Shelley use? [Maenad: a frenzied Nymph, attendant on Dionysos in the Greek mythology. May we not call this the most vivid, sustained, and impassioned amongst all Shelley's magical personifications of Nature? — P.]

323. [Written soon after the death, by shipwreck, of Wordsworth's brother John. This poem may be profitably compared with Shelley's following it. Each is the most complete expression of the innermost spirit of his art given by these great Poets: — of that Idea which, as in the case of the true Painter, (to quote the words of Reynolds,) "subsists only in the mind: The sight never beheld it, nor has the hand expressed it: it is an idea residing in the breast of the artist, which he is always labouring to impart, and which he dies at last without imparting." the Kind: the human race. — P.]

325. Ossian was an ancient Celtic bard.

328. Critics contend whether this or the Ode to a Nightingale is the greater poem; both are among the highest masterpieces of English literature. In this poem Keats expresses his creed of life, but, it ought to be remembered, with an undertone of personal reference — a lyric ought always, in some fashion, to be personal. Here it is his unhappy love affair that disturbs Keats's mind: in which stanza does he refer to it? The "urn" or vase of which he writes was probably no real vase, but a combination or amalgam of several vases which Keats had seen. He was intensely interested in anything pertaining to Greek life and art, and in this poem he sets forth his reactions with unforgettable beauty. One must imagine the poet taking up the urn in his hands and turning it around rapidly. His quick impressions are given in the first stanza — figures, leaves, the playing of music. Then he brings the urn to a standstill, and looks at the picture on one side — three figures stand out; and in the third stanza he adds his comment. Turning to the other side he sees another picture — a religious procession that has left empty of its folk some little Greek town. The last stanza sums it all up and calls attention, too, to the border (brede) that runs along the top of the vase. Of course one phrase in this poem has won immortal fame. But note, also, how skilfully Keats has written other lines — the third and fourth of stanza four, for example. Is the thought in the last stanza the same as in the seventh stanza of the Ode to a Nightingale? [St. 4 this folk:

its has been here plausibly but, perhaps, unnecessarily, conjectured. — Every one knows the general story of the Italian Renaissance, of the Revival of Letters. — From Petrarch's day to our own, that ancient world has renewed its youth: Poets and artists, students and thinkers, have yielded themselves wholly to its fascination, and deeply penetrated its spirit. Yet perhaps no one more truly has vivified, whilst idealising, the picture of Greek country life in the fancied Golden Age, than Keats in these lovely (if somewhat unequally executed) stanzas: — his quick imagination, by a kind of "natural magic," more than supplying the scholarship which his youth had no opportunity of gaining. — P.]

329. Remember how the opium habit destroyed Coleridge's career in order to appreciate the pathos of this poem.

335. The title means "dirge." Which dirge do you prefer, this or the preceding one?

337. To understand the phrase "natural piety" it is necessary to convert "natural" into a prepositional phrase, "of nature." The phrase sums up the philosophy of Wordsworth.

338. Words of eulogy are of little avail in connection with this magnificent poem, which has exerted a profound influence not merely on poetry, but on the general thought of mankind, and has helped to make the nineteenth and our own century the "centuries of the child." To-day we interpret our society and our civilization largely in terms of what they do for children; and education, for example, and the reduction of infant mortality are regarded as perhaps the chief business of society. It was Wordsworth as much as any man, who made people feel the importance of chil lren. The thought of the poem is profound; the writing of it occupied Wordsworth at diverse times during several years. Study it carefully, therefore. Wordsworth begins by telling you that he is afflicted with a somewhat depressed mood: he remembers a time when all the world had the glory and the freshness of a dream and seemed appareled in a heavenly light. But it is no longer so, and as he walks abroad in the blithe springtime he sees that the world is still beautiful, but that it is without its former glory. Yet, for the moment, the mere expressing of this gloomy thought gives him relief, and, for the moment, he rejoices with the lamb and other beasts, with the sights of nature, with the shepherd boy. So he walks along and berates himself for having been sullen. Suddenly he comes to a certain field, to a certain tree; and like a great wave his depression comes over him again. Why is this so? Deep in gloom he continues his walk and his meditation, realizes that the glory is gone forever, and comes at last to an explanation: given in stanza five. The thought therein stated is not original with Wordsworth: we have already found it expressed in Henry Vaughan's The Retreat, 98, but the expression which Wordsworth gives the idea has never been surpassed. He considers then the consolations which nature affords man as he loses the divine glory of his childhood, and pauses to watch a child amid his playthings — always seeking to grow up, playing at school or business or love or war. He gently reproaches the child for seeking to get old, but rejoices, so far as he is concerned, that he still has glimpses of the immortal sea from which all life came. So again a measure of joy returns to him, and he feels happy in the years that bring the philosophic mind and in his deep love of nature. It is well to make a careful summary of the poem stanza by stanza, to pick out the crucial lines, to ponder over Wordsworth's phrases until the meaning is quite clear. Note, too, how the verse form follows the thought instead of a mechanical regularity that would have been highly unsuitable for the theme. At the beginning and at the end of your analysis consider the exact meaning of Wordsworth's title.

339. Why did Palgrave select this poem with which to end his anthology? In what ways is it appropriate?

A BRIEF READING LIST FOR TEACHERS

Arnold, Matthew: Introduction to Ward's English Poets.
Bates, Arlo: The Study of Literature.
Bennett, Arnold: Literary Taste.
Bolenius, Emma Miller: Teaching Literature in the Grammar Grades and High School.
Cook, Albert S.: The Art of Poetry.
Corson, Hiram: A Primer of English Verse.
Crashaw, W. H.: An Interpretation of Literature.
Deland, Lorin F.: Imagination in Business.
Dixon, Macneile W.: English Epic and Heroic Poetry.
Eastman, Max: The Enjoyment of Poetry.
Erskine, John: The Kinds of Poetry.
Fairchild, A. H. R.: The Teaching of Poetry in the High School.
Gayley, C. M., and Scott, F. N.: An Introduction to the Methods and Materials of Literary Criticism.
Gayley, C. M., and Kurtz, B. P.: Methods and Materials of Literary Criticism: Lyric, Epic, and Allied Forms of Poetry.
Gummere, F. B.: A Handbook of Poetics.
Hudson, W. H.: An Introduction to the Study of Literature.
Lowes, J. L.: Convention and Revolt in Poetry.
Painter, F. V. N.: An Elementary Guide to Literary Criticism.
Palgrave, G. F.: Francis Turner Palgrave.
Perry, Bliss: A Study of Poetry.
Pritchard, F. H.: Training in Literary Appreciation.
Quiller-Couch, Sir Arthur: On the Art of Reading.
Schelling, Felix E.: The English Lyric.
Sharp, Russell A.: Teaching English in the High Schools.
Smith, Alphonso C.: What Can Literature Do for Me?
Somervell, David: Companion to The Golden Treasury.
Stedman, E. C.: The Nature of Poetry.
Thomas, C. S.: The Teaching of English in the Secondary School.
Ward, T. H., editor: English Poets.
Winchester, C. T.: Some Principles of English Criticism.
Woodberry, George E.: The Appreciation of Literature.
The English Journal, passim.

SUMMARIES OF ENGLISH LITERARY HISTORY

SUMMARY OF BOOK FIRST

[The Elizabethan Poetry, as it is rather vaguely termed, forms the substance of this Book, which contains pieces from Wyat under Henry VIII to Shakespeare midway through the reign of James I, and Drummond who carried on the early manner to a still later period. There is here a wide range of style; — from simplicity expressed in a language hardly yet broken-in to verse — through the pastoral fancies and Italian conceits of the strictly Elizabethan time — to the passionate reality of Shakespeare: yet a general uniformity of tone prevails. Few readers can fail to observe the natural sweetness of the verse, the single-hearted straightforwardness of the thoughts: — nor less, the limitation of subject to the many phases of one passion, which then characterized our lyrical poetry, — unless when, as in especial with Shakespeare, the "purple light of Love" is tempered by a spirit of sterner reflection. For the didactic verse of the century, although lyrical in form, yet very rarely rises to the pervading emotion, the golden cadence, proper to the lyric.

It should be observed that this and the following Summaries apply in the main to the Collection here presented, in which (besides its restriction to Lyrical Poetry) a strictly representative or historical Anthology has not been aimed at. Great excellence, in human art as in human character, has from the beginning of things been even more uniform than mediocrity, by virtue of the closeness of its approach to Nature: — and so far as the standard of Excellence kept in view has been attained in this volume, a comparative absence of extreme or temporary phases in style, a similarity of tone and manner, will be found throughout: — something neither modern nor ancient, but true and speaking to the heart of man alike throughout all ages. — P.]

See also, in the sketches of the "Poets of The Golden Treasury," pages 407 f., the accounts of the following authors:

Alexander	Barnefield	Beaumont
Campion	Daniel	Dekker
Devereux	Donne	Drayton
Drummond	Fletcher	Greene
Lodge	Lyly	Marlowe
Munday	Nash	Shakespeare
Sidney	Spenser	Sylvester
	Wyat

SUMMARY OF BOOK SECOND

[This division, embracing generally the latter eighty years of the seventeenth century, contains the close of our Early poetical style and the commencement of the Modern. In Dryden we see the first master of the new: in Milton, whose genius dominates here as Shakespeare's in the former book, — the crown and consummation of the early period. Their splendid Odes are far in advance of any prior attempts, Spenser's excepted: they exhibit that wider and grander range which years and experience and the struggles of the time conferred on Poetry. Our Muses now give expression to political feeling, to religious thought, to a high philosophic statesmanship in writers such as Marvell, Herbert, and Wotton: whilst in Marvell and Milton, again, we find noble attempts, hitherto rare in our literature, at pure description of nature, destined in our own age to be continued and equalled. Meanwhile the poetry of simple passion, although before 1660 often deformed by verbal fancies and conceits of thought, and afterwards by levity and an artificial tone, — produced in Herrick and Waller some charming pieces of more finished art than the Elizabethan: until in the courtly compliments of Sedley it seems to exhaust itself, and lie almost dormant for the hundred years between the days of Wither and Suckling and the days of Burns and Cowper. — That the change from our early style to the modern brought with it at first a loss of nature and simplicity is undeniable: yet the bolder and wider scope which Poetry took between 1620 and 1700, and the successful efforts then made to gain greater clearness in expression, in their results have been no slight compensation. — P.]

See also, in the sketches of the "Poets of THE GOLDEN TREASURY," page 407 f., the accounts of the following authors:

Carew	Cowley	Crashaw
Dryden	Herbert	Herrick
Heywood	Jonson	Lovelace
Marvell	Milton	Quarles
Sedley	Shirley	Suckling
Vaughan	Verstegan	Waller
Webster	Wilmot	Wither
	Wotton

SUMMARY OF BOOK THIRD

[It is more difficult to characterize the English Poetry of the eighteenth century than that of any other. For it was an age not only of spontaneous transition, but of bold experiment: it includes not only such absolute contrasts as distinguish the Rape of the Lock from the Parish Register, but such vast contemporaneous differences as lie between Pope and Collins, Burns and Cowper. Yet we may clearly trace three leading moods or tendencies: — the aspects of courtly or educated life represented by Pope and carried to exhaustion by his followers; the poetry of Nature and of Man, viewed through a cultivated, and at the same time an impassioned frame of mind by Collins and Gray: — lastly, the study of vivid and simple narrative, including natural description, begun by Gay and Thomson, pursued by Burns and others in the north, and established in England by Goldsmith, Percy, Crabbe, and Cowper. Great varieties in style accompanied these diversities in aim: poets could not always distinguish the manner suitable for subjects so far apart: and the union of conventional and of common language, exhibited most conspicuously by Burns, has given a tone to the poetry of that century which is better explained by reference to its historical origin than by naming it artificial. There is, again, a nobleness of thought, a courageous aim at high and, in a strict sense manly, excellence in many of the writers: — nor can that period be justly termed tame and wanting in originality, which produced poems such as Pope's Satires, Gray's Odes and Elegy, the ballads of Gay and Carey, the songs of Burns and Cowper. In truth Poetry at this, as at all times, was a more or less unconscious mirror of the genius of the age: and the many complex causes which made the eighteenth century the turning-time in modern European civilization are also more or less reflected in its verse. An intelligent reader will find the influence of Newton as markedly in the poems of Pope, as of Elizabeth in the plays of Shakespeare. On this great subject, however, these indications must here be sufficient. — P.]

See also, in the sketches of the "Poets of The Golden Treasury," p. 407 f., the accounts of the following authors:

Aiken	Blake	Burns
Carey	Cibber	J. Collins
W. Collins	Cowper	Elliott
Gay	Goldsmith	Graham
Gray	Habington	Lindsay
Logan	Mickle	Oliphant
Norris	Philips	Pope
Prior	Smart	Thomson

SUMMARY OF BOOK FOURTH

[It proves sufficiently the lavish wealth of our own age in Poetry, that the pieces which, without conscious departure from the Standard

Excellence, render this Book by far the longest, were with very few exceptions composed during the first thirty years of the nineteenth century. Exhaustive reasons can hardly be given for the strangely sudden appearance of individual genius: that, however, which assigns the splendid national achievements of our recent poetry to an impulse from the France of the first Republic and Empire is inadequate. The first French Revolution was rather one result, — the most conspicuous, indeed, yet itself in great measure essentially retrogressive, — of that wider and more potent spirit which through enquiry and attempt, through strength and weakness, sweeps mankind round the circles (not, as some too confidently argue, of Advance, but) of gradual Transformation: and it is to this that we must trace the literature of Modern Europe. But, without attempting discussion on the motive causes of Scott, Wordsworth, Shelley, and others, we may observe that these Poets carried to further perfection the later tendencies of the century preceding, in simplicity of narrative, reverence for human Passion and Character in every sphere, and love of Nature for herself: — that, whilst maintaining on the whole the advances in art made since the Restoration, they renewed the half-forgotten melody and depth of tone which marked the best Elizabethan writers: — that, lastly, to what was thus inherited they added a richness in language and a variety in metre, a force and fire in narrative, a tenderness and bloom in feeling, an insight into the finer passages of the Soul and the inner meanings of the landscape, a larger sense of Humanity, — hitherto scarcely attained, and perhaps unattainable even by predecessors of not inferior individual genius. In a word, the Nation which, after the Greeks in their glory, may fairly claim that during six centuries it has proved itself the most richly gifted of all nations for Poetry, expressed in these men the highest strength and prodigality of its nature. They interpreted the age to itself — hence the many phases of thought and style they present: — to sympathize with each, fervently and impartially, without fear and without fancifulness, is no doubtful step in the higher education of the soul. For purity in taste is absolutely proportionate to strength — and when once the mind has raised itself to grasp and to delight in excellence, those who love most will be found to love most wisely.

But the gallery which this Book offers to the reader will aid him more than any preface. It is a royal Palace of Poetry which he is invited to enter:

Adparet domus intus, et atria longa patescunt —

though it is, indeed, to the sympathetic eye only that its treasures will be visible. — P.]

See also, in the sketches of the "Poets of THE GOLDEN TREASURY," p. 407 f., the accounts of the following authors:

Byron	Campbell	H. Coleridge
S. T. Coleridge	Cunningham	Hood
Keats	C. Lamb	M. Lamb
Lyte	Moore	Rogers
Scott	Shelley	Southey
Wolfe	Wordsworth

POETS OF THE GOLDEN TREASURY

Anna Letitia Aikin (1743–1825) was the daughter of a clergyman, by whom she was instructed in the classics. A volume of poems in 1773 established her reputation, which was further increased in later years by the publication of numerous books in prose and verse, mainly for young people. She was married in 1774 to the Reverend Rochemont Barbauld, and with her husband she conducted a school at Palgrave, in Suffolk. Her writings are marked by acuteness, by keen sensibility, and by a great love of justice.

Sir William Alexander (1567? 1580?–1640) was raised toward the end of his life to the peerage, as the Earl of Stirling. He was a Scotch poet, courtier, and statesman, to whom King James I gave, by charter, the territory of Nova Scotia, afterwards sold to the French.

Richard Barnfield (1574–1627) was educated at Brasenose College, Oxford. He published poems anonymously that for a time were attributed to Shakespeare. His literary work was completed by the time he was twenty; he then, unfortunately, inherited an estate and ceased to write.

Francis Beaumont (1584–1627) was one of the brilliant group of dramatists who did their work in the earlier part of the seventeenth century. He was associated with Shakespeare, Ben Jonson, and others who met at the Mermaid Tavern, and his name is always linked with that of his collaborator and intimate friend, John Fletcher —

> Beaumont and Fletcher, those twin stars that run
> Their glorious course 'round Shakespeare's golden sun.
>
> Coleman

Their own age attributed to Fletcher the "keen treble" and to Beaumont the "deep bass" — that is, comedy and tragedy respectively. They brought on the stage, says Saintsbury, "a crew of harum-scarum, but not ungenerous young men; of lively, merry, but not unmaidenly or unladylike girls, who are very agreeable people to keep stage company with." They were very popular, and even Shakespeare imitated their style in drama, although both the younger men learned their craft, in poetry and on the stage, from the elder master. Beaumont died at an early age, and Fletcher after his death continued to write in the fashion that had made both of them popular. Their lyrics occur usually in their plays, and are among the finest of their age in melody and fancy. (See what is said later about Fletcher.)

WILLIAM BLAKE (1757–1827) is one of the strangest figures in English literature. Most poets (contrary to popular belief) are sane, rational persons, but Blake was undoubtedly either on the verge or across the edge of insanity — harmless and imaginative insanity, however. He was both an artist and a writer; and in his engravings as in his prose and verse he was an extremist. "He set convention at naught, despised and refused rules and models, and aimed, first of all, at the vague suggestion, as he would have said, of truth; as we may put it, of beauty," states Saintsbury. He definitely and firmly rejected the limits of reality, and lived, happily and beautifully, in the realm of the imagination. His poetry is mystical; he uses symbols to an extravagant degree; his whole attitude towards the world and life is that of a wonderful child. Blake's poems marked a strong and useful reaction against the too rational and commonsensical poetry of the eighteenth century, and are among the finest of their own or any other age.

ROBERT BURNS (1759–1796), the greatest of the poets who claim Scotland as a birthplace, is also among the greatest of all poets who write in English — for his warm-hearted humanity, for the singableness and melody of his poems, for his hatred of hypocrisy and his warm courage, for his magnificent love songs, for his biting satires and his humorous poems, for his sympathy with animals, for his adoration of flowers and children. Born of poor parents, Burns's childhood and youth were a constant struggle with bitter poverty. Not even the great success of his first volume of poems brought him ease in life; and the temptations of his age and the conviviality of his own temperament made him too ready a prey to the dangers of alcohol. But Burns's faults are condoned by a true understanding of the difficulties he faced and the conditions by which he was surrounded, and they are forgotten in the magic of his poetry. The obvious and striking honesty of the man and his poems, the homely beauty of the scenes he paints, the accuracy of his details, the strength of the emotions he expresses, and the power of his lines carry us away. Burns is in direct line with the best traditions of Scotch poetry, especially as to the readiness with which his poems are set to music. Often his poems were written to old tunes, and are still sung to them; sometimes he even incorporated in his verses refrains and fragments from the poems which these old tunes accompanied. Burns expresses not only Scotland; he expresses too the intense drive for democracy that began in his time, and he expresses the heart of man in all ages.

GEORGE GORDON, LORD BYRON (1788–1824) is probably the most romantic figure that has ever appeared in the annals of poetry, in any age or clime. Born lame, and intensely conscious of the defect all his life, Byron nevertheless was of athletic inclination and accomplishment — he was a good boxer, marksman, and swimmer, and at one time with a companion swam the Hellespont. He had a beautiful face and a remarkable voice, and fascinated men and women alike. His first volume of poems provoked unfavorable criticism, and Byron retaliated with a savage satire, English Bards and Scotch Reviewers, that won him an immediate reputation. After extensive travels in Europe, particularly in wild and savage scenes, he published Childe Harold, and extended his fame thereby through Europe and America. There poured from his pen a succession of striking poems, in most of which the hero is modeled on Byron himself, and is frequently an outcast from society. For in time Byron had suffered this fate, at least so far as England was concerned, by an unfortunate marriage and by errors of conduct on his part. He left England, never to return; lived for a time in Switzerland and Italy, and finally redeemed himself by going to Greece to help that country win its freedom from Turkey. There he died of fever, at the age of thirty-six. His poetry has a wide range, and it includes some of the most beautiful lyrics in the language. Byron's fame rests, too, on some of his longer poems, especially Don Juan, a novel in verse rich in satire and realism.

Thomas Campbell (1777–1844) is a poet whose reputation has not improved with time. He is noted to-day chiefly for the beauty of several of his lyrics, particularly those of a patriotic kind. A longer poem, Gertrude of Wyoming, is laid in an American setting.

Thomas Campion (1567?–1619) may be regarded as the chief representative of an important group of Elizabethan writers — those who composed poems to be set to music. The age of Elizabeth was a nest of singing birds, some one has said; almost every one could play or sing. Campion was the leader of the choir, but strangely enough, for a time he disappeared from view, and it remained for critics of the nineteenth century (Palgrave among others) to rescue his reputation and reveal him once more as an exquisite poet. Campion was well educated, and by vocation was a physician. Often he wrote his own music, and like his verse it was limpid, careful, and tuneful.

Thomas Carew (1598?–1638) marks the transition from the sincerity and sweetness of the Elizabethan lyric to a somewhat more artificial type of lyric that characterized the next era — that of James I and Charles I. He was above all a courtier, and his poems are polite but not always honest; they are clever but not always convincing. He paid compliments with courtly grace; and no one knew better how to fill his lines with quaint and pleasing fancies, with well-turned conceits, with pretty adornments. He loved wine and roses and fair women, and to the ladies he indited joyous or pensive poems that praised their beauty while mourning its inevitable passing, says Gosse.

Henry Carey (?–1743) is what is sometimes called "a single-poem author." The poem here given by Palgrave is the only one for which Carey is remembered. Little is known of him except that he wrote songs and plays.

Colley Cibber (1671–1757) was a popular actor and playwright of the age of Pope. The latter satirized him viciously in the Dunciad. Cibber became poet laureate, and wrote an entertaining autobiography, which is much better known than his numerous plays or than most of his verses.

Hartley Coleridge (1796–1849) was the son of the more famous Samuel Taylor Coleridge. He was a brilliant child and youth, and gave promise of becoming a great poet, but this promise did not materialize, and, like his father, he became subject to habits that ruined his career. Some biographers believe that he is "the six-years' darling of a pigmy size" who appears in the sixth stanza of Wordsworth's Ode on Intimations of Immortality, while others state that it was young Edward Wordsworth who served as the model for this famous image of immortality.

Samuel Taylor Coleridge (1772–1834) called Shakespeare "myriad-minded," but the adjective is one that may well be applied to himself. Educated, with Charles Lamb, at the famous Christ's Hospital school in London, he aroused marvel in all who knew him. He acquired an extraordinary fund of information on many subjects, but combined his learning with equally extraordinary powers of imagination and insight. He early made the acquaintance of Wordsworth, and the two poets for a time worked together in a friendship that produced great effects on English poetry. They published in common the Lyrical Ballads in 1798, and enunciated in this collection, by example and precept, their theories as to the nature of poetry and the methods by which it should be composed. For several years this friendship continued, but Coleridge, towards the end of the first decade of the new century, became a slave to opium, which at first he had taken to cure the pains of gout. The curse of this habit brought about the severance of all his domestic and other ties. Many years later Coleridge was practically cured of the habit, but he never recovered his original strength of imagination, and the second half of his life was devoted to the composition of critical articles and lectures and to philosophical analysis and not to the writing of poetry. What he wrote, mainly in the earlier years of his career, is for most part wonderfully good: full of the splendor of the senses and of an ecstasy of sound. But he was not only great as a poet; he also deeply influenced other poets by his ideas and his practice. His was one of the greatest minds and greatest imaginations in the whole range of English poetry.

John Collins (?–1808) is another "single-poem poet." The son of a tailor, he became an actor and invented a form of entertainment, combining song, dance, and story, that won him renown and wealth.

William Collins (1721–1759) is one of the most ethereal of English poets. He began his work at a time when the influence of Pope and his classical school was at its height, and by the delicacy and purity of his poems Collins did much to create a new era. Collins received a good education, and published his first poems at an early age. His work was received with unmerited neglect, and in his later years Collins's mind was clouded with melancholy. It has been said of his poetry that it contained in itself the whole Romantic school in germ, and that what faults it possessed were those of its age not of the poet.

Abraham Cowley (1618–1667) although he published much verse, was a better prose-writer than he was a poet. His career began during the period of the revolt against the Stuarts. He himself supported the Royalist party, and was obliged for a time to leave the country. But his services did not receive, at the Restoration of Charles II, the reward he thought they merited, and he retired to the country in disgust. His poems are labored and stuffed with frigid fancies ("conceits" they were called in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries); and only a little of his work survives.

William Cowper (1731–1800) was the son of a clergyman of good connections, who seemed destined for an easy life in leisurely public offices. But Cowper's mind became clouded, and at various times he was confined in an asylum. When free from such visits of mental disease, however, Cowper's mind worked well and fruitfully in many fields. Like Collins and others at this time, he helped to free poetry from the yoke of the too rigid rule of the classical school and its implicit faith in reason. Cowper sought rather to exalt the heart and the beneficent instincts. He wrote humbly but vividly of his immediate experiences — of the people and things around him, of the humble creatures of the field (for whom he enjoined sympathy), of current happenings. He is the poet of the fireside, of quiet musings, of humanitarianism. Occasionally the dread fate that menaced him finds expression in his poetry, as in the symbolic poem called The Castaway. Cowper, besides his poetry, wrote many very entertaining letters.

Richard Crashaw (1613–1649) is one of the great religious poets of English literature. He was a royalist, who followed the Stuarts to their French exile. He became a convert to Catholicism in France, and ended his life in Italy, where he had enjoyed a minor clerical office. Even in his non-religious poetry (such as that quoted by Palgrave) he shows ecstasy and mystic passion.

Allan Cunningham (1784–1842) was a Scotch poet, whose father had been a friend of Burns. Cunningham, besides prose work, wrote many songs and other poems in the Scotch dialect and some in standard English.

Samuel Daniel (1562–1619) was one of the celebrated sonneteers of the Elizabethan period, and his sonnets to "Delia," as he called the more or less real lady to whom he inscribed his poems, won him a great reputation. In recent years, however, it has been shown that some of the best known of Daniel's poems were based directly on French and Italian models. But the lyric sweetness of his verse still gives pleasure, and he is notable for his frequently felicitous phrasing.

Thomas Dekker (1570?–1640) is noted chiefly as a dramatist, in which rôle he displayed powers of jolly comedy and of vivid realism. His lyrics show tender feeling and pleasant melody.

Robert Devereux, Earl of Essex (1566–1601), wrote but little verse, and what he wrote should be read in connection with his life. He was a scholar, soldier, courtier, at one time high in Elizabeth's favor, later accused of treason by her and beheaded. He engaged in many exciting expeditions, and was sometimes accompanied in them by important literary men of the day.

John Donne (1573–1631) was among those who accompanied the Earl of Essex against the Spaniards, and among Donne's poems are some that commemorate these expeditions. Donne at first hoped for a place at court or in the civil service, but he was finally induced to enter the church. He became the royal chaplain and was given other preferments, in 1621 becoming the Dean of Saint Paul's. Donne's poems fall into two classes — religious and secular. The latter were for most part written in the earlier part of his life. Donne's poetry is serious in tone, heavily charged with emotion, restless in movement, burdened with quaint, sometimes queer fancies of all kinds. Often he attains a poetic wittiness equaled by no other poet. Donne above all seems to have striven to conceive subtle and unusual thoughts and to express them in an unusual way.

Michael Drayton (1563–1631) won a high reputation in his own age, both as a poet and as a man. He wrote a famous sonnet sequence, Idea's Mirror, many narrative poems of a patriotic kind, and numerous lyrics.

William Drummond (1585–1649) is always associated with the name of his estate, Hawthornden. He was a country gentleman who, long after Elizabeth was dead, cherished the ideals of the era to which she had given her name. His best verse recalls the splendors and melody of the Elizabethan period, although occasionally the style is inflated and unreal. Jonson visited the Laird of Hawthornden, who kept an exact and very valuable record of some of Jonson's remarks.

John Dryden (1631–1700), called "Glorious John" by his contemporaries, achieved renown in several fields. He was a fine poet, an effective dramatist, and an excellent prose writer — he has been called "the father of English prose." Dryden began his career as a follower of Oliver Cromwell, but later espoused the Royalist cause. He became a convert, too, in religion, and thus (not altogether justly) gained the name of a turncoat. He was a man of facile and persuasive mind, gifted in poetry both with lyrical and with satirical powers. His work shows judgment, restraint, energy, but did not attain the highest flights.

JANE ELLIOT (1727–1805) is said to have written the poem given in the text on a wager. She came of a good Scotch family, and was noted for retaining to the last many of the good old customs of Scotland.

JOHN FLETCHER (1579–1625) was the intimate friend and collaborator of Francis Beaumont — see the sketch of the latter. They wrote in common such highly popular plays as The Maid's Tragedy and Philaster. Fletcher was, however, sole author of a beautiful pastoral play, The Faithful Shepherdess, and of numerous other dramas. At one time the plays of Beaumont and Fletcher were performed more frequently than those of Shakespeare. Schelling points out how well Fletcher caught the Shakespearean tone in his lyrics — lightness and winged delicacy, facile grace and ease of expression; and he calls him "above all, an adaptable genius." All the critics comment on the joyousness and brilliancy of Fletcher's writings.

JOHN GAY (1685–1732) wrote one of the most famous of English comic operas, The Beggar's Opera, which had a long run in its own time and has been revived in our own time with great success. Gay wrote much else, usually in burlesque vein. He is a wonderfully clear mirror of the artificiality and gayety of his era.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH (1728–1774) was the great friend of Dr. Samuel Johnson, and Boswell has much to say of him. Some one once remarked of Goldsmith that "he wrote like an angel, but talked like poor Poll." He was personally a bungling, clumsy fellow, but very likable; and in his writings he attained success beyond most writers of his age, producing a great play, She Stoops to Conquer; a great novel, The Vicar of Wakefield; and several great poems, the best known of which is The Deserted Village. Goldsmith is one of those writers who can make any subject interesting.

ROBERT GRAHAM (1735–1797) had a varied career, being at one time a planter in Jamaica, later a member of Parliament. He wrote songs which became very popular; among them, that in the text is the best known.

THOMAS GRAY (1716–1771) is memorable for two things — he was an important forerunner of the Romantic movement, and he composed a poem that is probably more widely known, in almost every language spoken by man, than any other poem ever written. Gray was pre-eminently a scholar, and was closely connected throughout his life with Cambridge University. His verse occupies only a small bulk, but it is almost all of it of first-rate quality. Greatest of his poems was the Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard, upon the composition of which Gray labored for many years. This has made a universal appeal to the human heart, and versions of it can be found in almost all known tongues. Its delicate landscapes, its sympathy with human suffering, its felicity of phrasing, its tender and pensive melancholy caused Palgrave to call its stanzas "perhaps the noblest in our language." Other critics have rated Gray's Odes even higher than the Elegy.

Robert Greene (1560?–1592) was a short-lived author, a man of great ability, who wasted his talents on hack-writing and by ill-living. He wrote some novels and tracts that are among the best of the age in which he lived, and his poems often have a tender grace.

William Habington (1605–1654) was educated in England and in France. His father was implicated in the Gunpowder Plot, but was pardoned. Habington himself became a courtier and wrote verse in the current French fashion, also a tragi-comedy of no great merit.

George Herbert (1593–1633) was at first attached to the court of James I, but following his earlier inclinations he became a clergyman, and it is for his fine religious verse that he is renowned. In The Temple Herbert composed poems of much simplicity and of convincing sincerity.

Robert Herrick (1591–1674) was a clergyman who in the Noble Numbers wrote some excellent religious poetry, but who is chiefly noted for the entirely pagan verse that appears in his much more famous Hesperides. Born in London, Herrick passed the greater part of his mature years in Devonshire. He was an ardent admirer and follower of Ben Jonson, and like him deeply immersed in Greek and Roman literature. He liked to imagine himself a Roman poet, saying matins and evensongs in honor of Jove or paying vows to Mars and Neptune. For his poems he invented a bevy of ladies to whom he pays his court. His philosophy was boldly that of Epicurus's devotees — "eat, drink, and be merry, for to-morrow we die"; and he bids all who read his poems make good use of the passing hour. He loved colors, perfumes, beautiful women, the countryside, birds and bees, old customs, the fairies, and merrymaking. In his poems are many quaint touches of ancient England at its best; and for certain moods there is no reading more enjoyable than Herrick.

Thomas Heywood (?–1649?) was called by Charles Lamb "a sort of prose Shakespeare." He lived in the time of Shakespeare and wrote many plays, of which the best known is A Woman Killed with Kindness.

Thomas Hood (1799–1845) an intimate friend of Charles Lamb, was a humorous writer, who wrote voluminously for the press and composed some of the best comic poems in the language. But his fame is almost as securely founded on his serious poetry, of which the three best examples are given in The Golden Treasury. Hood had a passionate sympathy for humanity, especially the lowly and downtrodden, and this sympathy shines forth brilliantly in his poems. The Bridge of Sighs is remarkable, besides, for its powers of craftsmanship — its use of triple rhymes, for example.

BEN JONSON (1573–1637) sometimes spelled his name "Johnson," and he was similar in many strange ways to his great namesake of a later age — Dr. Samuel Johnson. Both were men of burly build, of dictatorial habits, of great learning, of deep capacity for friendship, of hasty and often surly speech, of wide ability. Around each gathered an admiring coterie, and the pungent remarks in conversation of both men are better known than their own writings. Jonson was, however, pre-eminently a playwright; and he is usually as such opposed to his greater contemporary Shakespeare, whose friend he was, although Jonson did not hesitate to criticize him. Jonson wrote plays with a strong classical tinge, but he was, too, a close observer of manners and morals, and many of his scenes are convincingly realistic. In addition, Jonson wrote many masques for performance by courtiers, and in these occur some of his most beautiful lyrics.

JOHN KEATS (1795–1821), despite his death at a pitiably early age, left a heritage of poetry that is ranked with the best that has been produced in our language. Keats in the opinion of the best judges may be placed as a lyric poet alongside Shakespeare, and it is certain that had life been spared him he would have produced work in other directions that would have made that position even more certain. By vocation Keats was a physician, but he early dedicated himself to poetry, and in a short three years before his death by consumption produced a series of brief masterpieces. He was personally a man of pugnacity, courage, and self-reliance, and his letters reveal in him a depth of thought and a power of expression in prose such as few poets at his age have had. In his poetry Keats was above all a devotee of beauty, and he abhorred any attempt to express in poetry moral or social or political views. In his writings one escapes from the certain turmoil and the frequent materialism of modern life into a world of loveliness, filled with images from Greek myth and medieval story. He had an unsurpassed ability to perceive objects in a flash and to render them in immortal phrases. His senses were abnormally keen, and they paid him tribute of many striking images.

CHARLES LAMB (1775–1834) is best known as one of the great prose masters of the language, but even in his prose the poetic strain is prominent, and in occasional verses he produced some notable work. In Lamb's life the tragedy in which his sister Mary was involved colored everything, and gave even his quaint humor a melancholy tinge. He was a lover of old things — old books, old plays, old china, old places. His writings are rich in quaint fancies and humors, in odd thoughts happily expressed.

MARY LAMB (1764–1847) possessed like her brother great literary ability, and they wrote several books in collaboration, mostly for children. Over her, of course, the shadow of the domestic tragedy in which the Lambs were involved hung even more deeply than over Charles, but both strove against its consequences with a quiet courage that makes them seem heroic. She helped her brother entertain the many famous men and women who were their friends, and she was highly esteemed by all of them.

ANNE LINDSAY (1750–1825) was the daughter of the Earl of Balcarres. She married Andrew Barnard, son of the Bishop of Limerick; and on his death married Sir James Bland Burges. She wrote the poem included in THE GOLDEN TREASURY in 1771, and it became very popular. But her authorship of the poem was not known until Sir Walter Scott revealed it in The Pirate in 1823.

THOMAS LODGE (1558?–1625) is remembered by others than scholars chiefly because his novel Rosalynde suggested to Shakespeare the plot of As You Like It. Lodge was a physician who wrote poems, plays, novels, and pamphlets. It is his lyrics that are his chief passport to fame.

JOHN LOGAN (1748–1788) was a Scotch clergyman who wrote plays and poems. His sermons were highly esteemed, but it is the poem preserved in this collection by which he is chiefly remembered.

RICHARD LOVELACE (1618–1658) belonged to the same group of "Cavalier Lyrists" to which Carew, Herrick, and Suckling belonged — men of a light and easy frame of mind, whose poems are half-mocking, half-serious praises of love and loved ones. Lovelace, whom his contemporaries spoke of as "an extraordinarily handsome man, but proud," took an active part in the war that led to the execution of Charles I. He led a Royalist regiment and was wounded at Dunkirk. In a few of his poems, one critic well says, "the braggadocio of the Cavalier is transmuted into the finer sentiment of the knight-errant." The best expression of this knight-errantry is, of course, in To Lucasta, on Going to the Wars.

JOHN LYLY (1553–1606) was a dramatist, novelist, and poet of Shakespeare's time, who became a "best seller" in his day and deeply influenced all contemporary writers. To him is credited the invention of a prose style called "Euphuism," named after his novel, Euphues, or, The Anatomy of Wit. It was a highly artificial style, overburdened with alliteration, fantastic figures of speech, and an impossible zoölogy — Shakespeare makes fun of it in some of his plays, but imitates it occasionally. In Lyly's plays occur some excellent lyrics.

HENRY FRANCIS LYTE (1793–1847) was a British clergyman who composed a famous hymn, Abide with Me, and wrote also some other hymns that have become very popular.

CHRISTOPHER MARLOWE (1564–1593), older by two months than Shakespeare, was his chief forerunner. In Marlowe's plays Shakespeare found a true model for his own, and Marlowe was the first to write dramatic blank verse of poetic quality. His Doctor Faustus is still one of the great romantic tragedies of all ages. Marlowe also wrote narrative poems and lyrics that were equal in quality to the verse of his drama. The son of a shoemaker, Marlowe came to early maturity, and he had practically run his course before Shakespeare began writing any of his finer works.

Andrew Marvell (1621–1678) was an intimate friend and associate of Milton, and one can often trace the influence of Milton's ideas on Marvell. But Marvell can well afford to stand on his own feet as a first-rate poet, for his sensitiveness to beauty, for the glamour of his phrases, for the melody of his lines, for the originality and power of his ideas. Marvell was throughout life an advocate of liberty of conscience. In a corrupt age he was noted for his unswerving integrity.

William Julius Mickle (1735–1788) may possibly not be the author of the excellent and famous poem given as his by Palgrave. He was a scholar, who translated the Lusiad of the Portuguese poet Camoens, and he published numerous ballads, one of which suggested to Scott the plot of Kenilworth.

John Milton (1608–1674) is usually reckoned as "second among the sons of light," taking his place next to Shakespeare in the hierarchy of English poets. His life and works fall into three periods. During the first, while he was receiving his excellent classical and musical education at home and at Cambridge, and while he was residing in the beautiful village of Horton, he composed his lyrical poems, — the Ode on the Morning of Christ's Nativity, L'Allegro, and Il Penseroso, Lycidas, and some of his sonnets; likewise the lyrical masque Comus. During the second period, when Milton was actively engaged in work for the Commonwealth, he wrote mostly in prose, but composed also a number of sonnets. His zeal as Cromwell's Latin secretary brought on blindness. After the fall of the Commonwealth, Milton lived in retirement and produced the massive epic for which he is best known — Paradise Lost, together with its sequel, Paradise Regained, and a Biblical play in Greek style, Samson Agonistes. Milton's writings have an unequaled grandeur and sublimity. In his earlier poems (those given in Palgrave) he displays a richly endowed temperament and writes verses of almost flawless beauty. It was at this period of his life that the Puritanism which was at the basis of Milton's intellect was happily blended with the paganism and delight in loveliness which are at the heart of every true poet. Even in these earlier poems, however, one hears now and then a sterner note; and the maturer Milton is already prefigured in the twin-poems and especially in Lycidas.

Thomas Moore (1779–1852) was the poet of Ireland and of love; in some of his poems he seems to be singing a light love song, but is really thinking of his native land, at that time still not free. Moore had a genuine gift for writing sentimental poems readily set to music, and some of his lyrics (like Pro Patria Mori, 261) are known and sung wherever English is spoken. Moore was dapper, charming — and manly. He was an intimate friend of Lord Byron. Drinkwater says of Moore that he wrote "softly amorous ditties in tinkling anapests."

Anthony Munday (1553-1633), The Shepherd Tonie, was a noted translator of the age of Elizabeth. He made a specialty of novels, and rendered works of this kind from the French, Spanish, and Italian.

Carolina Oliphant, Baroness Nairne (1766–1845) was a Scotch poetess, famed for her beauty. She was deeply under the influence of Burns and in her poems imitated his songs. The poem in Palgrave was written to comfort a friend who had lost a child.

Thomas Nash (1567–1601) was an Elizabethan writer, a man of short and merry life — like Robert Greene. He wrote pamphlets and novels, of which the most noted is The Unfortunate Traveler, or, The Life of Jack Walton. Nash wrote vigorously and (in his lyrics) sometimes beautifully.

John Norris (1657–1711) was a writer on religious and philosophical subjects, who opposed the ideas of John Locke.

Ambrose Philips (1675–1749) was well acquainted with all the chief writers of his age, and by many of them was esteemed highly. Pope, however, sneered at him; and a satirist of the time invented the term "namby-pamby" to describe Philips's somewhat inane poetry. He was a public official, a member of Parliament, and, at the end of his life, a judge.

Alexander Pope (1688–1744) represents the classical (or the neo-classical) spirit in English literature better than any other writer of his era — its insistence on common sense and the rule of reason, its fear of the imagination and of unrestrained emotions, its interest in town life rather than in nature, its adherence to rules and regulations, its devotion to Latin literature and to French criticism, its preference for the heroic couplet and for odes to any other form of verse, its general "cult of correctness." Pope himself, born with a slight deformity and barred because of his religious faith from hope of attaining such public office as many other authors of his time reached, devoted himself exclusively to literature. He composed the best satires (such as the Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot), the finest example of light verse (The Rape of the Lock), and the smoothest didactic poems (The Essay on Man, for example) in the language. He had an astonishing gift for compressing much thought into small compass, and more lines from Pope have passed into common use as by-words and proverbs than from any other English authors except Shakespeare and Wordsworth.

Matthew Prior (1664–1721) held many offices in the British public service. Although he attempted poetry both light and serious, it is mainly on the former that his fame is founded. He writes gayly and cleverly, usually in a familiar style, often with sly humor. He has been called an "eighteenth-century Herrick."

Francis Quarles (1592–1644) was a student of law, who was much more interested in religion than in law. His Emblems are noted for their excessive quaintness and for the too great fondness of Quarles for strange imagery.

Samuel Rogers (1763–1855) became a wealthy banker, but he was all his life deeply interested in literature, published various poems, and was well acquainted with many of the chief writers of his day, many of whom he assisted with pecuniary aid. His Italy may still be used as a poetic guidebook to that country.

Sir Walter Scott (1771–1832) is one of the noblest figures in English literature. Despite a slight lameness he loved outdoor life. He engaged in law and in farming, and was active in the public service. Children and animals loved him. He began his writing by collecting old ballads along the Scotch border, often patching up those that were imperfect. In this apprentice period he also translated ballads from the German. Later he began composing original poems, first ballads and brief poems, later such long narratives as The Lady of the Lake and The Lay of the Last Minstrel, which became immensely popular. When Byron began publishing his narrative poems, however, Scott resigned the field to him, and started his famous Waverley Novels, the long series of which won him fame not only in England but all over the continent of Europe and in America. These novels established what is called "the historical novel," and have had innumerable imitators. Scott as a poet is full of dash and fire. He is a brilliant story-teller, and the tapestry of his narrative glows with charming landscapes and with heroic figures. In all his work Scott made the past live again. His lyrics, while not rated so highly as those of some of his contemporaries, are often beautiful in thought, feeling, and expression.

Sir Charles Sedley (1639–1701) had a great reputation in his time as a wit, but his plays hardly bear out this reputation. He had, however, a neat gift for song-writing.

William Shakespeare (1564–1616) hardly needs much description. The greatest writer of all times wrote plays and published poems in the days of Queen Elizabeth and of James I. In his work he runs the whole gamut of human emotion and creates a gallery of character not elsewhere equalled or surpassed for lifelikeness and variety. Shakespeare had an uncanny knack (similar to that of such other great writers as Dickens and Kipling) for assimilating with lightning-like rapidity the point of view of men and women of great diversity of character, trade, outlook, and background. He had, besides, an even greater knack for expressing what he had perceived. He was a great dramatist and a great poet, who has given to the memory of mankind innumerable characters and lines for familiar reference. His lyrics occur either as separate publications or in the course of his plays, and like his plays display great powers of expression and great variety — and, in addition, an irresistible sweetness of tone. Shakespeare, plays and poems alike, is an immense ocean of thought, from which inexhaustible riches seem to come, each age and each country interpreting him from a special viewpoint.

Percy Bysshe Shelley (1792–1822), like Byron and like Keats, with both of whom he was friendly, died at an early age; and in the phrase which he himself uses in Adonais, his elegy on Keats, he was "an inheritor of unfulfilled renown." Shelley came of a family of good rank, from whom his marriage to a girl of lowlier station estranged him. On her death he married Mary Godwin, whose father and mother were extreme radicals in matters of religion and politics. He adopted many of their views, and was regarded with distrust by many of the ultra-respectable of his time; a good many of his ideas have, however, been adopted since his time. Shelley lived for a while in Italy, and it was there that he was drowned when the little boat in which he was sailing was overtaken by a tempest. Shelley's poetry is ethereal; it is the pure and quintessential spirit of poetry. Often the meter is regulated by the inward thought rather than by any mechanical considerations. Shelley looked on nature as a series of personifications, and to him the forces of nature often seemed living beings — as the world did to the myth-making Greeks. Greatest of his works, aside from his lyrics, is Prometheus Unbound, in which Shelley expressed with grandeur and beauty his ideas of life, the universe, and man. Always Shelley makes love — for the individual as well as for the race — the great agency in the regeneration of mankind.

James Shirley (1596–1666) began his work as a dramatist a few years after the death of Shakespeare, was popular until the outbreak of the Revolution, followed the fortunes of the Royalists, and after the Restoration returned to live in London, where the shock of the Great Fire killed him. He was of gentle and amiable character, of a scholarly turn, and of higher moral standard in his writings for the stage than was customary in his days. Lamb called him "the last of a great race."

Sir Philip Sidney (1554–1586) is the great gentleman of English literature. He was the embodiment of the idealism, the chivalry, the learning, the daring, and the splendor of the Elizabethan Age. He was a soldier, a courtier, a scholar, a novelist, a critic, and a poet, the intimate friend of many of the chief writers of his day, "a lover of mankind and goodness," says his friend and biographer, Fulke Greville. His heroic death on the battlefield of Zutphen, preceded by his act of grace in giving a cup of water that had been brought him to a wounded soldier nearby, with the words, "Thy necessity is greater than mine," only bore out the whole trend of his life. He wrote sonnets under the title Astrophel and Stella, an Apology for Poetry, and a novel, Arcadia, that won him esteem in his own time and fame thereafter.

CHRISTOPHER SMART (1722–1771) belongs with William Blake in more respects than one. He was well educated, lost his reason at an early age, and in a lucid interval wrote the Song to David, an extraordinary religious poem from which the stanzas in the text are taken.

ROBERT SOUTHEY (1774–1843) sought all his life to establish his fame as a poet, published voluminous and careful works in verse, was certain himself that he belonged with the major poets of his age, but is remembered to-day by only a few lyrics and by a passage or two from his longer writings. He was a contemporary and close friend of Coleridge and Wordsworth, and preceded the latter as poet laureate. Like his two friends he turned from an extreme political and religious radicalism in his youth to an equally extreme conservatism in his middle and old age; and so brought down upon himself the wrath of liberals like Byron. He was a good man, a lover of books and a scholar, and in prose he composed some excellent works (like The Life of Nelson) likely to preserve his reputation much longer than his verse.

EDMUND SPENSER (1552–1599) was one of the great Elizabethans. He came of an excellent family and was well educated. He was brought into contact with the group surrounding Sir Philip Sidney and was given political preferment in Ireland — with unhappy results, as it proved, for Spenser thought of his stay as an exile, and in 1598 a rebellion forced him and his family to flee. His death shortly afterwards came in part as the result of his experiences. His literary career began with the publication of The Shepherd's Calendar, and various beautiful lyrics shortly established his position. But it is The Faërie Queene (never completed) for which Spenser is chiefly known. In this great poem Spenser interweaves a story of chivalry and fairyland with an allegory of his own times; Gloriana of the poem is at the same time an ideal figure of virtue and a symbol for Queen Elizabeth. Spenser writes with constant melody and with fertile imagination, and many beautiful passages in his epic have deeply influenced later poets. He was the inventor, it should also be mentioned, of the Spenserian stanza, which poets in the romantic period of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries revived with delight and used constantly.

SIR JOHN SUCKLING (1609–1642) may be described as perhaps the most impudent and nonchalant of the "Cavalier Lyrists." He was a soldier, a member of Parliament, and a Royalist. A contemporary calls him "the greatest gallant of his time." In his poetry he is often cynical and sophisticated; his poems have an air of swagger and brag that amuses but does not always convince.

JOSHUA SYLVESTER (1563–1618) was a business man and courtier, who loved literature and practiced it when he could. He translated from the French and did some original work.

JAMES THOMSON (1700–1748) is one of the important forerunners of the Romantic revival. Like others of these forerunners he was by birth a Scotchman, and in his nature poems one often finds the Scotch landscape. His chief work is The Seasons, probably the first long poem in the English language the interest of which is centered in nature rather than in man. Thomson's The Castle of Indolence is considered the best of the innumerable imitations of Spenser which marked the growth of the romantic movement during the eighteenth century.

Henry Vaughan (1622–1695) belongs to the group of Caroline lyrists and to the subdivision of that group which was chiefly interested in religion. He was educated at Oxford, served with the king's troops during the Civil War, and afterwards studied medicine. He imitated Donne at first and later other poets, but in time found a style of his own, a style full of mystic insight. He is notable not only in himself, but as anticipating Wordsworth's ideas on the sacredness of childhood.

Richard Verstegan (?–1635?) was an antiquary of Dutch extraction. He removed to Holland, where he died. His chief work is one that describes the characteristics of the English people.

Edmund Waller (1606–1687) was a man of fortunate life, well educated, wealthy, and held in high esteem. During the Civil War he followed at first the cause of Hampden, then plotted on the side of the king. The plot was discovered, but Waller was pardoned; and on the Restoration he found high favor at the court of Charles II. He was one of the first to write the heroic couplet, later so popular with Dryden, Pope, Johnson, and other neo-classical writers, with smoothness and skill; and he was revered as a model during the eighteenth century. At present he is remembered for the lyrics that Palgrave quotes — light, not too sincere poetry.

John Webster (1580?–1625) was the greatest of Shakespeare's successors. He was the son of a tailor who seems to have received a good education. He began his career by collaborating with various noted dramatists, and finally came to the composition of a series of great tragedies, among which The Duchess of Malfi and The White Devil are the finest. Taine calls him "a somber man, whose thoughts seem incessantly to be haunting tombs and charnel-houses," and another critic points to his full acquaintance with "the vocabulary of grief." He has lines that startle with the intensity of the horror and tragedy they produce.

John Wilmot, Earl of Rochester (1647–1680) was one of the dissolute courtiers who won the favor of Charles II. His poetry is clever, but too frequently insincere and cynical.

George Wither (1588–1667) wrote poetry of much variety, including satires, love lyrics, and religious verse. For one of his satires he was imprisoned. During the Commonwealth period he served with the Roundheads and attained the rank of major-general.

CHARLES WOLFE (1791–1823) wrote tender and moving lyrics, and the shortness of his life lends poignancy to his writings. Born and educated in Ireland, he entered the Episcopal Church there. He is remembered chiefly for his poem on the burial of Sir John Moore, quoted by Palgrave.

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH (1770–1850), ranked as one of the greatest of English poets, "the Shakespeare of the world of nature," was born in the northern part of England and for the greater part of his life lived in the Lake District there, the beauty of which is reflected in many of his poems. His youth was of a gayer and wilder kind than might be suspected from the sobriety and respectability of his later writings and his later years. During the French Revolutionary period he adopted with enthusiasm the views of the extreme Jacobins, lived in France for a time, and wished to join the Gallic radicals. On his return to England he fell under the influence of Coleridge, whose ideas on transcendentalism and many other topics were adopted by Wordsworth. From about 1797 to 1807 or 1808 was the great blossoming time of Wordsworth's career, and it was during these years that he composed the poems by which he is chiefly remembered — numerous lyrics, a number of narrative poems, The Prelude, many sonnets, and much philosophic meditation in verse. Then a break with Coleridge and the hardening and ageing of the poet's character brought about a change in his opinions, and he became as conservative in his views as before he had been radical. The change was a sincere one, but it brought down upon Wordsworth the scornful denunciations of the liberals of the day. His poetry undoubtedly deteriorated after this time, although every once in a while his genius would flash forth in a great lyric. Wordsworth continued to write much verse, and his political and social views as therein expressed are of considerable interest, if of little poetic value. He accepted the position of exciseman from the government, and in 1843, on Southey's death, he became poet laureate. Personally the poet was a man of austere temperament, very conscious of his great mission and not very likable. His interpretation of nature is a deeply religious one and has profoundly influenced all later English and American poetry. He sought simplicity and passion in poetry, and helped to bring back the style of poetry from the artificial diction of the eighteenth century. In humanity he wished to interpret the common man and the common thing, and often did so very successfully.

SIR HENRY WOTTON (1568–1639) was a friend of Milton. He traveled extensively and for some years served as a British ambassador in Italy and Germany, and in 1625 became provost of Eton, the famous school. He wrote prose works and lyric poems.

SIR THOMAS WYAT (1503–1542) was a courtier of Henry VIII, and took part in many of the important events of that monarch's reign, being visited alternately with his pleasure and his disfavor. For a time he was an ambassador to the Spanish Emperor, to the Papal States, and elsewhere. In the intervals of a busy official life he still managed to write poetry, and was influential in introducing into English literature the important Italian and French novelties of the Renaissance. Perhaps his greatest service was the introduction of the sonnet. But he experimented in many directions, and throughout showed fertility and vigor. He has been called "the most significant figure in English poetry between Chaucer and Spenser."

EXERCISES BASED ON "THE GOLDEN TREASURY"

SOME INVESTIGATIONS

1. From which authors did Palgrave make most selections? Make a list of five such authors, and then, in an essay of about 250 words, tell why in your opinion he chose these poets as being most worth-while.

2. Which poems in THE GOLDEN TREASURY might best be set to music? Why? Select half a dozen such poems, and then ask your music teacher if musical settings exist for these poems. Perhaps you can arrange to have some of them performed.

3. From what poems are the following lines taken? (If you cannot locate these from memory, do so with the help of your text.)

BOOK FIRST

a. Then live with me and be my Love.
b. . . . the lark, at break of day arising
From sullen earth, sings hymns at heaven's gate.
c. And beauty making beautiful old rhyme.
d. Care-charmer Sleep, son of the sable Night.
e. Sweet Thames! run softly till I end my song.

BOOK SECOND

a. He nothing common did or mean
Upon that memorable scene.
b. Fame is no plant that grows on mortal soil.
c. They also serve who only stand and wait.
d. I could not love thee, Dear, so much
Loved I not honor more.
e. None but the brave deserves the fair.

BOOK THIRD

a. Ruin seize thee, ruthless King!
b. With necks in thunder clothed and long resounding pace.
c. The best laid schemes o' mice an' men
Gang aft a-gley.
d. Some mute inglorious Milton here may rest.
e. I am monarch of all I survey.

BOOK FOURTH

a. Or like stout Cortez, when with eagle eyes
He stared at the Pacific.
b. Fair as a star, when only one
Is shining in the sky.
c. Stern Daughter of the Voice of God!
d. Our sweetest songs are those that tell of saddest thought.
e. Heaven lies about us in our infancy.

4. Find a striking and unusual figure of speech in each of Palgrave's four divisions, and turn it into prose and your own language.

5. Did Palgrave arrange the poems in his anthology in a haphazard, accidental way, or did he follow a pattern or principle? Does one poem naturally suggest the next? Take the poems in any of the books, and see if they fall into groups. Let members of the class compare their groupings. Is the pattern the same in all four books?

6. With the help of a large dictionary define the following terms: poem, verse, prose, meter, lyric, ode, sonnet, madrigal, elegy, stanza, couplet.

TOPICS FOR DISCUSSION

1. The Elizabethan Song-Book and Madrigal.
2. The Aims of Puritanism.
3. Classicism and Romanticism.
4. The Medieval Revival.
5. The Scotch Poets.
6. The Ode in English Poetry.
7. The Sonnet in English Poetry.
8. The Ballad in English Poetry.
9. Does a Poet Express His Personality and the Events of His Life in His Poems?
10. Fancy versus Imagination.

STORY THEMES

1. William Drummond Interviews Ben Jonson at Hawthornden.
2. A Scene at the Mermaid Tavern.
3. A Day in Elizabethan London.
4. A Dialogue between John Milton and Andrew Marvell.
5. Robert Herrick Tells in His Old Age How He Knew Ben Jonson.
6. Three Scenes in London in 1665, as Recorded in an Old Diary.
7. Put into prose the story told in 135 or 136.
8. Imagine a man out walking. He sees some of the sights described in L'Allegro and Il Penseroso. Give an account of his ramble.
9. A bystander watches Timotheus rouse Alexander to various emotions and actions (Alexander's Feast, 151). Have him tell a friend what happened.
10. Tell the story of The Bard, 159, of the Loss of the Royal George, 165, or of The Castaway, 205.
11. Have the maiden describe the matters related in The Outlaw, 213.
12. Write a short story based on Lord Ullin's Daughter, 225, or The Maid of Neidpath, 240, or After Blenheim, 260, or Ruth, 320.

SUGGESTIONS FOR PROJECTS

1. Prepare an "Anthology of English Verse," representing your own favorites. In an introduction tell about "My Likes and Dislikes in Poetry." Let most of your selections come from Palgrave, but include a supplement giving poems that you have found elsewhere and liked. Be sure to write a title-page, and often it is graceful to devote a page to a line or two of dedication of the anthology to some person to whom you feel grateful. Then should come your table of contents. Such an anthology can be given a very pleasing appearance if you decorate the pages with suitable illustrations. Of course if you can manage to type-write it, or to bind the leaves in an attractive way (with a decorated cover), so much the better.

2. See if you can collect some suitable illustrations for the poems included in THE GOLDEN TREASURY — or perhaps for one book or for one poet. Or you may have artistic talent, and in that case you will want to make your own drawings for the poems.

3. Music has been written for many of the poems in THE GOLDEN TREASURY. Make a list of such musical versions, and perhaps secure the performance of them. Or, once more, you may wish to try your own skill as a composer by preparing musical settings for some of your favorite poems in Palgrave.

4. Most of the great poets, from the Age of Elizabeth on, appear in THE GOLDEN TREASURY. Devise a pageant or "Masque of Poets," in which some of these poets appear, and assign them as dialogue lines from the poems from their pens quoted by Palgrave.

5. Would any of the poems of THE GOLDEN TREASURY be suitable for production as motion pictures? Prepare a suggested scenario or outline for such a movie.

6. In many of the poems in THE GOLDEN TREASURY may be found beautiful pictures or striking figures. Select one or more such poems, and work out the directions for a tableau. You might, for example, prepare a tableau of the four seasons, based on different poems; and in that case you will go to these poems for directions as to costuming, posture, and action.

7. Prepare a "Manual of Quotations," with the help of THE GOLDEN TREASURY — that is, arrange on successive pages of a notebook striking quotations relating to various topics. For example, one garland of quotations might relate to the seasons, another to fame, another to patriotism, and so on. In the course of your written work see how many of these quotations you can manage to introduce from time to time.

8. Turn to the "Index of First Lines" at the back of this text. How many of the poets who wrote these lines can you name?

9. Many of the poems in THE GOLDEN TREASURY may appropriately be recited in connection with various holiday exercises. Here are some suggestions:

Armistice Day:
The Last Conqueror, 91.
The Soldier's Dream, 314.
Thanksgiving Day:
Song of the Emigrants in Bermuda, 146.
The Song of David, 179.
Ode to Autumn, 303.
Christmas Day:
Ode on the Morning of Christ's Nativity, 85.
Ode to Winter, 304.
Lincoln's Birthday:
The Man of Life Upright, 79.
Washington's Birthday:
Character of a Happy Life, 95.
Arbor Day:
To Daffodils, 140.
Thoughts in a Garden, 142.
Ode on the Spring, 182.
Composed at Neidpath Castle, 294.
The Beech Tree's Petition, 295.
Memorial Day:
Death the Leveler, 92.
Ode Written in 1746, 160.
Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard, 187.
Pro Patria Mori, 261.
Flag Day:
When I Have Borne in Memory, 258.

10. The culmination of all work in THE GOLDEN TREASURY should be the writing of some kind of original verse — even if it be only a few lines long. Write on any subject, write seriously or humorously, write in any meter or stanza form, but write. Springtime — your country — falling in love — a character sketch — a description of a beautiful scene — a narrative of some interesting event in history or in last night's newspaper — an explanation — these and other subjects may be suggested. Write an "Ode to Hydrogen," a defense or a denunciation of the League of Nations, an imitation or a parody of some poem you like, a sonnet to your mother, an elegy for Memorial Day, a dialogue in verse between Winter and Summer, a class-day poem, a ballad of a battle, or an address to Francis Turner Palgrave. Perhaps the ballad stanza (such as Campbell employs in Lord Ullin's Daughter, 225) is the easiest for most students to employ, but it may be well to pick out some poem the sound of which particularly pleases you and to write in the meter and with the rhyme scheme it uses. Make sure the meter of your poem, whatever the meter may be, is correct: count the syllables on your fingers, and mark the accents carefully. Writing verse may look difficult, but it is a knack almost any one can acquire.

WORDS FOR STUDY

DIFFICULT TERMS

In THE GOLDEN TREASURY are used many words that will repay study. As has been said in the Introduction, poets are particularly nice in their use of words, and we often gain a deeper insight into the meaning of their writings if we consider carefully the terms they employ. Here are a number of words that you ought to look up in Webster. Be sure, first of all, that you know how to pronounce each word — the sound of a poem, or of a word in a poem, is always important in the sense and in the total effect. Then look up the derivation or history of the word — poets often have this in mind as they write. Finally, learn the meaning; if several definitions are given, see which definition best fits into the poem.

BOOK FIRST

whist decore prime woe-begone nativity censures caitiffs dirge prothalamion posies shend baldric fly

featly orient muse blazon eclipse dole cypress equipage feateously eftsoons whilom tide forsworn

burthen kirtle fond baiting-place ill-adventured stint wont prune vermeil assoil peer aggravate simplicity

BOOK SECOND

lowly sphere consort sable-stoled maze bergamot welter copses doff turtle genius orient

sequacious climacteric battening boots it

gaudy sovran timbrel fays diapason valor gadding guerdon

foil amaranthus taffeta civility mortifies fallows junkets matin commercing plight garish phantasy
hautboys

sanguine laureate ensigns pole peer pied lubber pomp aye curfew consort diapason
flambeau

mitered dolphins tabernacle pelican sweetbrier neat-handed crop-full pensioners hist buskined enamel sublime enthusiast

Book Third

chastised ruthless din downs (noun) mimic brede obscurest

dolphin sable usurper ecstasy energic sequestered pad-pony

moduling azure wraith viol colter buxom nabob

Book Fourth

realms pensile romance in fee astrologer
coronach darkling dappled croft pranked ingle pæan adept wilding

winsome laving pibroch dun cerements unbodied debonair sallows lintwhites vaulted kirtle bier timbrels
tabor mettled rue unchartered sage contumely hymeneal peers bourn halcyon dulcimer savannahs hulk of yore coronal

ARCHAIC WORDS

Most poets love old words. They not only continue to use terms that are gradually going out of use elsewhere, but they often deliberately go back to earlier literature and revive antique words the beauty of which appeals to them; or they give familiar words an antique meaning. Sometimes, as a result, these words come back into favor again. The following lists give a number of such archaic words used by the poets of THE GOLDEN TREASURY. Study them carefully, be able to define them, and tell whether you like the words. If a familiar word is given here, look it up in its older sense. (Webster gives the meanings approximately in chronological order.)

BOOK FIRST

featly	burthen	whenas
prease	misprision	grame
wroken	ramage	thunderstone
dole	vermeil	assoil
shend	whilom	eftsoons

BOOK SECOND

sovran	whist	silly (85)
unexpressive	ychained	eyn
fays	uncessant	glistering
reft	amain	bespake
enow	reck	list (verb)
flashy	swart	rathe
uncouth	fondly	empery
wit	suage	awful
fowls	waly	brae
burn	busk	fell
curious	nappy	sate
dight	weeds	bestead
grain	pale (noun)	massy
dight	spell	wracks

BOOK THIRD

numbers	gauds	decent blow (noun)	grisly	lilting
bonny	mavis	tassie
trow	antic	fantastic
madding	leal	greet

BOOK FOURTH

trancéd	parle	demesne
brand	musketoon	wight
minster	county (of a man)	lay
gloom	fain	eremite

pennon	bowse	inch (geog.)
clerks	measures	paramours
pards (animals)	clown	strath
shoon	conceit	misfeature

REFERENCE TERMS TO LOOK UP

The poets whose work appears in THE GOLDEN TREASURY frequently refer to matters of history, of literature, of mythology, and of geography. To appreciate their poems such references must be clearly understood. Here are some words it is advisable to look up — in a large dictionary, in an encyclopedia, or in some other reference manual.

BOOK FIRST

Memnon	Peneus	Amphion
Jove	Philomela	Helen of Troy
Leda	Muse	Hesper
Tithon	Flora	Amphion
Zephyr	Phœbus	Parnassus
Pandion	Hercules	Tempe

BOOK SECOND

Lucifer	Pan	Cynthia
Delphos	Lars	Lemures
Baalim	Ashtaroth	Ammon
Thammuz	Moloch	Isis
Anubis	Osiris	Memphis
Typhon	Tubal	Orpheus
Saint Cecilia	Hampton Court	Capitol
Satyrs	Fauns	Mona
Deva	Furies	Arethusa
Alpheus	Hebrides	Doric
Electra	Favonius	Attic
Tuscan	Themis	Tritons
Sirens	Titan	Martinmas
Daphne	silver jenny	Cerberus
Stygian	Cimmerian	Euphrosyne
Hebe	Cynosure	Mab
Friar's lantern	goblin	Hymen
Jonson	Lydian	Elysian
Pluto	Morpheus	Prince Memnon
Cassiopeia	Cypress	Cynthia
Thebes	Pelops	Troy
Sylvanus	genius	Ormus
Saint Cecilia	Thais	Darius

Book Third

Hybla
Nereid
Llewellyn
Æolian
Thracia
Faun
Hampden
Electra
Cambria
Taliessin
Helicon
Hyperion
Satyrs
Gorgon
Tyre
Snowdon
Yarrow
Ceres
Latium
Ouse
Alexander Selkirk

Book Fourth

Mount Ida
Neidpath Castle
Blenheim
Promethean
Lethe
Hippocrene
Cheapside
Runic
Hebe
Amphitrite
Ossian
Tempe
Cortez
Elsinore
Cardigan
Robin Hood
Flora
Ariel
Cyclops
Odin
Cherokees
Mænad
Proteus
Arcady
Lochgyle
Mermaid Tavern
Bonnivard
Zodiac
Provençal
Miranda
Lofoden
Mount Alora
Euganean
Baiæ
Triton
Trossachs

QUESTIONS ON THE FOUR BOOKS OF "THE GOLDEN TREASURY" AND ON ITS CHIEF AUTHORS

GENERAL QUESTIONS ON BOOK FIRST

1. What are the boundaries of the Elizabethan Age (represented in Book First), according to Palgrave? (See p. 402.)

2. What, according to Palgrave, are the chief qualities of this period? (See p. 402.)

3. Which of the poems on death in this section seems to you to offer by its sound and sense, by its music and its reflections, the greatest consolation against death? Which would you yourself like to read after a bereavement?

4. Do you think the poets of this period exaggerated the emotions they experienced when they fell in love? Give examples of hyperbolical statements.

5. What were some of the favorite verse-forms of this age? Is there much variety? Is the poetry of this era truly lyrical?

William Drummond

1. Judging by his poems, should you say that Drummond was a learned poet? Give lines to illustrate your answer.

2. What other characteristics of Drummond can you guess from his poetry?

3. Are Drummond's stanza forms as regular as those of Campion? Who is the more musical?

4. Is the prevailing mood of Drummond joyous or melancholy? Cite poems.

5. Pick out what you think is the most striking and vivid line in Drummond's poems.

Thomas Campion

1. Among the most popular publications of the Elizabethan period were song-books, containing delightful verses and melodious music. Of "this tuneful realm of Elizabethan song," says Felix Schelling, Thomas Campion was the prince. What in the poems by Campion in The Golden Treasury shows that the author intended them to go with music? Are they in themselves musical?

2. What is the chief subject of Campion? Upon what other themes does he write?

3. Does Campion greatly vary his meters and rhyme-schemes? Give illustrations.

4. Are Campion's poems difficult to understand? Does he employ many unusual words? Has he many obscure references and allusions?

5. Which of Campion's poems, in your judgment, is the most musical? Which is the finest in thought?

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE

1. From what other poet did Palgrave draw more selections than from Shakespeare? Was he justified in so doing?

2. Was Shakespeare preëminently a lyrical poet? Where did Palgrave find the selections included in THE GOLDEN TREASURY?

3. Upon what subjects did Shakespeare write his poems? Did he write best upon some particular theme, or was his inspiration aroused by numerous themes?

4. Is there much variety of versification in Shakespeare's poems? What are some of his favorite forms?

5. For which of his poems would a musical setting be suitable? Was music written for any of them in Shakespeare's time? Can you name any musical composers since Shakespeare's time who have set music to his poems?

6. In which of Shakespeare's lyrics is he above all fanciful? In which is he realistic? In which is his mood gay? In which is it gloomy?

7. Which of Shakespeare's poems is most difficult to understand? What is the cause of the difficulty?

8. One critic picks out the "depth of emotion" and the "splendor of imagery" as the outstanding characteristics of the Sonnets of Shakespeare. Show that this is so.

9. Is it possible from Shakespeare's poems to get any idea as to the poet's opinions on the world, on religion, on love and friendship, on his art, on human nature, or other matters? Answer in detail.

10. Which poem of Shakespeare's impressed you most deeply? Which seems to you most suitable for memorization? Why?

GENERAL QUESTIONS ON BOOK SECOND

1. What years does Book Second include? (See p. 403.)

2. Who are some of the dominant writers of this period? What are some characteristics of the period? What are some of its defects? (See p. 403.)

3. What signs do you find in the poetry of this age that it was greatly under the influence of Greek and Latin literature?

4. In what respects is the poetry of this era less free, more restrained than the poetry of the Elizabethan Age?

5. What poems of this book are gay? sad? reverent? oratorical? rich in fancy? stately? quaint? exaggerated in sentiment? simple? complicated?

JOHN MILTON

1. What other great works did Milton compose besides the poems given in THE GOLDEN TREASURY?

2. To which periods of Milton's life do the poems included in this collection belong?

3. What can you tell about Milton as a young man from the lyrics here given? What do you learn about Milton in middle life from his sonnets?

4. How is it possible to judge from Milton's earlier poems that even as a youth he was deeply interested in serious matters? What was the character of these serious interests?

5. Collect from the poems here given evidence of the fact that Milton had read widely. Was his reading of a narrow range? Was he interested only in literature?

6. Prove from these poems that in Milton's mind there existed a conflict between his deep love of beauty and the austerity of the Puritan.

7. Of Milton's Nativity Ode it has been said that it has "fire, melody, color," but that it lacks purity of style and delicacy; that occasionally its language is turgid and incongruous. Milton's later poems have all the merits and none of the defects of the Nativity Ode. Give instances of each of the qualities mentioned.

8. Where in these poems does Milton show his deep interest in music? Do you suppose he knew much about this subject? Explain your answer.

9. Did Milton know his Bible well? Give reasons for your answer.

10. Pick out what you think is the most memorable and beautiful of Milton's poems, and give your reasons for selecting it.

ANDREW MARVELL

1. Show that Marvell in his poems displays a remarkable ability to express many moods and to employ with dexterity and skill many styles.

2. Does Marvell anywhere show the influence of Milton? Is he in any poems strikingly different from Milton?

3. Which poem by Marvell shows, in your opinion, the greatest powers of fancy? Which is the most ingenious in its language?

4. Does Marvell give an accurate picture of Bermuda in 146? Put his details into your own language.

5. What can you learn of Marvell's character from his poetry?

ROBERT HERRICK

1. Herrick above all emphasized the sad shortness, the tearful beauty of life. Mention poems in which this mood predominates.

2. But Herrick loved as well the gayety and joyousness of the world, and bids us enjoy our days while we can. Illustrate this mood.

3. Is there any evidence in Herrick's poems that he was by vocation a clergyman? Or did he reserve his serious mood for other poems than those here given? (See his Noble Numbers.)

4. Of Herrick it has been said that he contrives to fill his poems with the warmth of sunlight, the odor of flowers, the fertility of orchard and harvest-field. Illustrate.

5. What old customs are mentioned in Herrick's poems?

GENERAL QUESTIONS ON BOOK THIRD

1. Who are some of the contrasting authors of the eighteenth century? (See Palgrave, p. 404.)

2. What are three leading moods or tendencies in this age? (See Palgrave, p. 404.)

3. What is the most famous poem in this book? What are some other well-known poems in this section?

4. What are some general characteristics of this period?

5. Which writings in this period belong to the classical trend represented by Pope? Which belong to the romantic movement represented by Burns? How can you tell?

THOMAS GRAY

1. Is felicity of phrase the outstanding accomplishment of Gray? Give some examples of phrases in his poems with which you have long been familiar and of others that you consider especially good.

2. What is meant by "a Pindaric Ode"? Who was Pindar? Did any other poets included in THE GOLDEN TREASURY write Pindaric Odes?

3. What has given such world-wide fame to the Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard? Do you like the poem? Why? Explain your answer.

4. Some critics prefer Gray's odes to the Elegy. Do you agree with them? Justify your answer.

5. Is Gray always serious? Is he successful when not serious?

WILLIAM COWPER

1. Do you find any references to himself in Cowper's poems? Give examples.

2. In what respects does Cowper stand midway between the classical and the romantic methods of writing? Does his style belong to the one and his material to the other?

3. Which of Cowper's poems, in your opinion, show the deepest feeling?

4. What, would you judge, was the character of Mary Unwin?

5. What phrases in Cowper's poems do you especially like?

ROBERT BURNS

1. Are the Scotch justified in giving so high a place to Burns? Why?

2. Show that Burns's poems are varied in theme, mood, and form.

3. Do you find the dialect that Burns uses difficult to understand? Does it become easier when you read it aloud? What rules can you give for its pronunciation?

4. How does Burns display in his poems the new sympathy for animals?

5. Have many of Burns's poems been set to music? Were any written to music already existent? How are they especially suited to a musical setting?

6. How do Burns's poems resemble some of the old ballads? (See poems listed as anonymous in index of writers.)

7. Do you agree with critics that the outstanding quality of Burns's work is its sincerity? Which poems seem to you especially sincere?

8. Burns's lines are said to "go home" with inevitable force and directness because of their vividness. Give examples of pictures you carry away with you from his poems.

9. Why has Burns been so widely beloved as a poet?

10. Which of Burns's poems do you like the best? Why?

GENERAL QUESTIONS ON BOOK FOURTH

1. Was Palgrave right to make Book Fourth the longest in his collection? What major poets appear in this section?

2. Was the French Revolution the probable cause of the outburst of poetical genius during this period? (See Palgrave, p. 405.)

3. What later traits of the eighteenth century did the poets of the beginning of the nineteenth century continue? In what ways did they go back to the Elizabethan Period? (See Palgrave, p. 405.)

4. Which poet seems to you the greatest, as a writer of lyrics, in this book? Why?

5. Which poem in Book Fourth is your favorite? Why?

THOMAS CAMPBELL

1. Why did Campbell appeal especially to Palgrave as a patriotic Englishman?

2. What are the diverse themes of Campbell? Which of his themes appeals to you most?

3. What are some of the varieties of meter and rhyme-scheme that Campbell employs?

4. Which poem of Campbell's has the most delicate lyric grace? the greatest energy? the most sentiment?

5. What other poets, in your opinion, does Campbell resemble? In what ways?

SIR WALTER SCOTT

1. Is Scott best known as a lyric poet? Mention some of his other works.

2. How does Scott recall and resemble the old ballad-writers?

3. Is energy or sentiment the most prominent quality of Scott's poems? Illustrate.

4. Why is Scott's The Pride of Youth sometimes selected as the greatest of his poems?

5. Which of Scott's lyrics suggest a story? Summarize one such story briefly.

LORD BYRON

1. What were some of the subjects on which Byron wrote? Do his themes differ from those of other poets?

2. What was Byron's attitude towards nature? Compare him with Wordsworth and Shelley.

3. Could Byron's songs be set to music as readily as those of Burns? Explain your answer.

4. What makes Byron's poems so suitable for recitations?

5. What is the prevailing mood of Byron? What are some of his favorite ideas?

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY

1. Upon what subjects does Shelley like to write? On which theme does he seem to you to write the best poetry?

2. Were Shelley's senses keen? Were they sometimes so keen as to give him pain rather than pleasure? Illustrate.

3. What are some colors mentioned in Shelley's poems? Was he fond of bright hues? What in your judgment was his favorite color?

4. Collect references in Shelley's poems to flowers, music, and clouds.

5. Are Shelley's poems personal in tone? Does he ever refer to himself? to his friends? to places he has visited?

6. What is meant by a lyric? How well do Shelley's poems meet the definition?

7. Which can be set more easily to music, the poems of Shelley or those of Burns? Why?

8. Compare Shelley's, Byron's, and Wordsworth's views of nature.

9. Where does Shelley's verse show the poet's power to make the movement of his lines respond to his mood? How does he adapt the stanza form to the subject?

10. Which, in your opinion, is the best of Shelley's poems? Which are the finest lines in Shelley? Which is the most striking figure of speech? the most vivid description?

JOHN KEATS

1. How do Keats's odes differ from those of Gray? Do they resemble Shelley's?

2. Find in Keats references to his own personality and the episodes of his life.

3. What proof can you bring that Keats was a master of many varied metrical forms?

4. Which poems indicate Keats's sympathy with the Middle Ages and the Elizabethan period?

5. Give instances of the keenness of Keats's five senses.

6. Who is easier to understand, Keats or Shelley? Why?

7. Compare Keats's Ode to a Nightingale with Shelley's To a Skylark in subject-matter, verse form, and interest. Does the mood of the poets differ? Which uses more complex stanza forms? Which is harder to understand?

8. The great Greek sculptor Phidias said, "Show me beauty, and I will show you strength." Is this a contradiction of what Keats says in the Ode on a Grecian Urn? Defend your reply.

9. Judging from the poems given by Palgrave, do you think that Keats would have become an even greater poet had he lived?

10. Which picture from Keats's poems stands out most vividly in your mind? Which line or passage of his do you like best?

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH

1. Was Palgrave justified in giving to Wordsworth the largest amount of space assigned to any poet in THE GOLDEN TREASURY?

2. What were Wordsworth's views on nature? Illustrate by quoting lines from various poems.

3. What were Wordsworth's views of the soul and immortality? Does he mention the subject elsewhere than in his famous ode on immortality?

4. What were Wordsworth's views of England and of the age in which he lived?

5. Do the poems tell you anything about Wordsworth himself?

Does he refer to his views of education? to his travels? his wife? his reading? his favorite writers? his relatives? his tastes in food and amusements?

6. Which of Wordsworth's senses was most acute? Are there many smell-images in Wordsworth? What kinds of sound did he like especially well?

7. How would Wordsworth have people live their lives? What was his recipe for happiness?

8. What were Wordsworth's ideas as to women, their nature, their education, and their influence? Do different poems express different views?

9. Does Wordsworth resemble any other poet with whom you are familiar? In what way?

10. What is meant by transcendentalism? Where does Wordsworth express transcendental views?

RECENT COLLEGE ENTRANCE EXAMINATIONS

QUESTIONS THAT DEAL WITH POEMS IN "THE GOLDEN TREASURY"[1]

1. Which of the shorter poems in THE GOLDEN TREASURY do you admire most and for what reasons? (Point out, also, if you can, an essential difference between these and the longer poems.)

2. Compare some lyric poems by Wordsworth, Keats, and Shelley with regard to their choice and treatment of subjects.

3. Briefly show how, in choice of subjects and in other respects, the lyric differs from other kinds of poetry. (You may illustrate your answer by referring by title to poems, by quoting single lines or short passages, or by using a longer continuous passage.)

4. What representative ideas of Wordsworth are found in the following poems? The Daffodils ("I wandered lonely as a cloud"); The Reverie of Poor Susan; Simon Lee; The Reaper; The World Is Too Much with Us.

5. a. What resemblances do you find between The Reaper and To the Highland Girl of Inversneyde? Who wrote these two poems?
   b. Name four odes you have studied in Book Fourth of THE GOLDEN TREASURY. Give the author of each.

6. a. Why is Wordsworth's To a Skylark correctly classed as a lyric? How does it differ in form from a sonnet?
   b. If the poem contains a prominent idea, express it as definitely as you can in a sentence or two.
   c. In what respects is the poem characteristic of Wordsworth rather than of Shelley?

7. a. How does the form of Keats's sonnet, The Terror of Death, differ from the sonnet form used by Wordsworth?
   b. Explain why Keats should be writing of death, and show how his desires as here expressed are partially, at least, realized in the Ode to Autumn and Ode on a Grecian Urn or any other of his poems to which you may wish to refer.

8. Name the author of each of five of the following quotations from THE GOLDEN TREASURY, and the titles of the three poems in which they occur. Give the thought of one poem in full, or quote at least twelve consecutive lines of one poem.

[1] From Examination Questions, copyrighted by the College Entrance Examination Board. Used by permission.

1. She dwelt among the untrodden ways.
2. Forever wilt thou love and she be fair.
3. Not in utter nakedness
   But trailing clouds of glory do we come.
4. If winter comes, can spring be far behind?
5. One word is too often profaned for me to profane it.
6. Thy soul was like a star and dwelt apart.
7. The Sedge has withered from the lake
   And no birds sing.
8. Look on my works, ye Mighty, and despair.

9. What are the qualities of lyric poetry? Mention examples from Book Fourth of THE GOLDEN TREASURY of (a) an ode, (b) a sonnet, (c) a song.

10. Name the poem from which the following passage is taken, and discuss the poem briefly, considering its main thought, the circumstances to which it refers, or its poetic beauty:

Wee, sleekit, cow'rin, tim'rous beastie,
Oh, what a panic's in thy breastie,
Thou need na start awa sae hasty,
Wi' bickering brattle!
I wad be laith to rin an' chase thee
Wi' murdiring pattle!

11. Discuss the influence of Burns's songs.

12. If you have read Carlyle's Essay on Burns, discuss the saying, "Indignation makes verses," with illustrations from the poetry of Burns.

13. Name the poem from which the following passage is taken, and discuss the poem briefly, considering its main thought, the circumstances to which it refers, or its poetic beauty:

I am monarch of all I survey;
  My right there is none to dispute;
From the centre all round to the sea
  I am lord of the fowl and the brute.
O Solitude! where are the charms
  That sages have seen in thy face?
Better dwell in the midst of alarms,
  Than reign in this horrible place.

14. Name the poem from which the following passage is taken, and discuss the poem briefly, considering its main thought, the circumstances to which it refers, or its poetic beauty:

'Twas at the royal feast for Persia won
  By Philip's warlike son —
    Aloft in awful state
    The godlike hero sate
  On his imperial throne;
His valiant peers were placed around
Their brows with roses and with myrtles bound
  (So should desert in arms be crown'd).

15. Name the poem from which the following passage is taken, and discuss the poem briefly, considering its main thought, the circumstances to which it refers, or its poetic beauty:

> The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power,
> And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave
> Await alike the inevitable hour: —
> The paths of glory lead but to the grave.

16. Discuss Gray's Elegy from the viewpoint of (a) descriptive details; (b) verse and style; (c) theme, view of life. (150 words.)

17. Make a study of Il Penseroso and L'Allegro as companion poems, showing in some detail (a) the correspondence in form and structure and (b) the difference in subject-matter and mood.

18. In Macaulay's Essay on Milton occurs the following passage:

> In none of the works of Milton is his peculiar manner more happily displayed than in the "Allegro" and the "Penseroso." It is impossible to conceive that the mechanism of language can be brought to a more exquisite degree of perfection. These poems differ from others as attar of roses differs from ordinary rose-water, the close-packed essence from the thin, diluted mixture. They are, indeed, not so much poems as collections of hints, from each of which the reader is to make out a poem for himself. Every epithet is a text for a stanza.

Quote from L'Allegro and Il Penseroso several phrases, lines, or passages that exemplify the statements in italics. Give your reasons for the selection of any one of these.

19. Give reasons for supposing that the melancholy of Il Penseroso was neither gloominess nor pessimism. (300 words or more.)

20. a. How does Milton describe the character called Melancholy in Il Penseroso?

b. Judging from what Milton tells us of the goddess Melancholy, what do you think was his conception of melancholy and how does it differ from ours?

21.

> Thee, chauntress, oft the woods among
> I woo, to hear thy even-song;
> And, missing thee, I walk unseen
> On the dry smooth shaven green,
> To behold the wandering moon,
> Riding near her highest noon,
> Like one that had been led astray
> Through the heaven's wide pathless way,
> And oft, as if her head she bowed,
> Stooping through a fleecy cloud.

a. What qualities or characteristics of poetry as distinguished from prose are to be seen in the foregoing passage?

b. What words seem to you particularly effective in making the description vivid?

c. Point out what there is in the passage that reflects the prevailing mood of the poem from which it is taken.

22.

Or bid the soul of Orpheus sing
Such notes as, warbled to the string,
Drew iron tears down Pluto's cheek
And made Hell grant what love did seek;
Or call up him that left half-told
The story of Cambuscan bold,
Of Camball, and of Algarsife,
And who had Canace to wife.

Macaulay says of the poetry of Milton: "Its effect is produced not so much by what it expresses as by what it suggests." Select from the foregoing quotation any two phrases which seem to you to illustrate Macaulay's statement, and explain what these phrases suggest.

23. a. Explain the following passage.

b. Show in what respects it is characteristic of Milton:

Or let my lamp, at midnight hour,
Be seen in some high lonely tower,
Where I may oft outwatch the Bear
With thrice-great Hermes, or unsphere
The spirit of Plato, to unfold
What worlds or what vast regions hold
The immortal mind that hath forsook
Her mansion in this fleshly nook.

24.

Thus, Night, oft see me in thy pale career,
Till civil-suited Morn appear,
Not tricked and frounced, as she was wont
With the Attic boy to hunt,
But kerchieft in a comely cloud,
While rocking winds are piping loud,
Or ushered with a shower still,
When the gust hath blown his fill,
Ending on the rustling leaves,
With minute-drops from off the eaves.

a. From what poem is this passage taken?

b. What kind of life was the poet leading at the time when this poem was written?

c. Explain the italicized words.

25. The following passages are from Milton's Paradise Lost, which was published in 1667.

What points of comparison and what points of contrast do you detect between this selection and L'Allegro and Il Penseroso with regard to both the writer's mastery of verse and his outlook upon life?

No more of talk where God or Angel Guest
With Man, as with his friend, familiar used

To sit indulgent, and with him partake
Rural repast, permitting him the while
Venial discourse unblamed. I now must change
Those notes to tragic — foul distrust, and breach,
Disloyal; on the part of man, revolt
And disobedience; on the part of Heaven,
Now alienated, distance and distaste,
Anger and just rebuke, and judgment given,
That brought into this World a world of woe,
Sin and her shadow Death, and Misery.
Death's harbinger.[1]

26.

Hence, loathèd Melancholy,
Of Cerberus and blackest Midnight born
In Stygian cave forlorn,
'Mongst horrid shapes, and shrieks, and sights unholy!

L'Allegro

Hence, vain deluding Joys,
The brood of Folly without father bred!
How little you bested,
Or fill the fixed mind with all your toys!

Il Penseroso

a. Show how Milton achieves the contrast in these two passages by choice of images and words.

b. Refer to at least three other passages in the two poems which are as definitely parallel as these.

27. Do you regard Milton's use of allusion as a grace or as an encumbrance to his verse? Illustrate your answer by reference to particular passages in L'Allegro or Il Penseroso, in which he employs allusions of (a) a mythological, (b) a pastoral, or (c) a literary nature.

28. In whose memory was Lycidas written? How was the life of this man connected with Milton's attack on the clergy in the poem?

29.

Next Camus, reverend sire, went footing slow,
His mantle hairy, and his bonnet sedge,
Inwrought with figures dim, and on the edge
Like to that sanguine flower inscribed with woe.
"Ah! who hath reft," quoth he, "my dearest pledge?"

a. Who or what is signified by Camus, and why is he thus described?

b. Explain the reference to "sanguine flower."

c. What is referred to in the last line?

30.

Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise
(That last infirmity of noble mind)
To scorn delights and live laborious days;
But the fair guerdon when we hope to find,
And think to burst out into sudden blaze,
Comes the blind Fury with the abhorred shears,
And slits the thin-spun life.

[1] Forerunner.

a. From what poem is the above passage taken? Explain the italicized expressions.

b. To what type of poetry does the poem from which this is taken belong?

c. Scan the first four lines, naming the meter and the irregular feet, if any.

31. Quote from Milton or Shakespeare at least ten consecutive lines (other than those printed on this paper); give their setting and tell why to you the lines seem worth committing to memory.

32. Which of the shorter poems in THE GOLDEN TREASURY do you most admire, and for what reasons? (Point out, also, if you can, any essential differences between these and the longer poems.) (150 words or more.)

33. Mention some qualities or characteristics of lyric poetry seen in specific poems of Wordsworth (or any other poet). (150 words or more.)

34. Why do you think poetry is not more read nowadays? What lyric poet do you think most likely to appeal to persons of your acquaintance not now interested in poetry? On what grounds do you recommend this poet?

35. Contrast any two poets, or any two poems, that appeal to you strongly but for different reasons.

36. Name and illustrate the chief differences between prose and poetry.

37. Answer a and either b or c.

a. Choose one of the following poets: Milton, Wordsworth, Keats, Shelley. Mention several of his poems which you have read.

b. What passages in these poems do you remember most clearly? What qualities make these passages memorable?

c. From these poems quote ten or fifteen lines. What qualities make these lines worth memorizing?

38. Quote ten or twelve lines of poetry. Describe the meter and the rhyme scheme. Point out the particularly effective words, and give reasons for your selection of these words.

39. What poets and what poems have you found most pleasure and profit in reading? Answer in one or more well-developed paragraphs, giving full reasons for your answer and including quotations if possible.

40. State very briefly what you remember most clearly and vividly from each of six poems that you have read. So far as you can, give in two instances the reasons for your vivid impressions.

41. Write in several paragraphs a composition of about four hundred words upon the following subject: Why I like (or do not like) poetry. Choose such aspects of the subject as you can well discuss according to an orderly, consecutive plan, in which each paragraph shall be one stage.

42. Choose from the poems that you have read six which you would recommend to a friend of your own age. Give in each case the reasons for your choice.

43. Choose some poet with whose writings you are familiar.

a. What subjects did he write about?

b. Name two of his poems and state fully the way in which he has treated the subjects of these two poems.

44. There is poetry of thought, of feeling, of incident. Name one poem of each kind and state its main theme.

45. Show wherein the poet has advantages over the writer of prose. Use definite examples or references.

46. a. Paraphrase Wordsworth's sonnet, The World Is Too Much with Us.

b. What is Wordsworth's attitude toward the spirit of commercialism in life? What is his attitude toward nature?

47. Using as far as possible your own words, give the meaning of each sentence in the sonnet by Milton On His Blindness. Be sure that your own sentences are clear, natural, and idiomatic.

48. Using as far as possible your own words, give the meaning of each sentence in Keats's sonnet beginning, "Much have I traveled." Be sure that your own sentences are clear, natural, and idiomatic.

49. Take Shakespeare's sonnet beginning "That time of year."

a. This sonnet develops a single thought. Indicate the four parts into which it falls; state briefly the theme of each, and with this help summarize the sonnet in a single sentence.

b. What aids toward keeping the thought connection clear does Shakespeare provide in each of the four parts?

c. In each quatrain what figurative turn is given to the concrete detail with which the quatrain begins? In what way does the last line of the sonnet refer back to all these figures?

d. What synonymous words might, without regard for meter, be substituted for hang and shake in the first quatrain and for glowing in the third?

e. Why, in each case, would the word substituted be less effective? (Answer a, b, and either c or d.)

Write a theme on "The Use of the Imagination in Reading."

INDEX OF AUTHORS

References are to pages. The dates, given in parentheses, are those of the author's lifetime

Alexander, William (1567?–1640) 32

Barbauld, Anna Letitia (1743–1825) 213
Barnefield, Richard (1574–1627) 41
Beaumont, Francis (1584–1616) 87
Blake, William, (1757–1827) 172, 181, 214
Burns, Robert (1759–1796) 160, 168, 172, 184, 192, 193, 194, 196, 199, 200
Byron, George Noel Gordon (1788–1824) 219, 222, 223, 238, 248, 257, 270, 280

Campbell, Thomas (1777–1844) 228, 235, 245, 252, 253, 260, 302, 313, 324, 326, 360
Campion, Thomas (c. 1567–1619) 30, 44, 45, 47, 50, 64, 65, 94, 129
Carew, Thomas (1598?–1638) 104
Carey, Henry (d. 1743) 167
Cibber, Colley (1671–1757) 152
Coleridge, Hartley (1796–1849) 224
Coleridge, Samuel Taylor (1772–1834) 216, 328, 354
Collins, John (d. 1808) 212
Collins, William (1731–1800) 149, 159, 177, 186
Cowley, Abraham (1618–1667) 115, 122
Cowper, William (1731–1800) 164, 170, 183, 204, 206, 208, 210
Crashaw, Richard (1613?–1649) 96
Cunningham, Allan (1784–1842) 251

Daniel, Samuel (1562–1619) 41
Dekker, Thomas (1570?–1641?) 63
Devereux, Robert (Earl of Essex) (1566–1601) 67
Donne, John (1573?–1631) 22
Drayton, Michael (1563–1631) 43
Drummond, William (1585–1649) 16, 51, 52, 64, 66, 68
Dryden, John (1631–1700) 76, 143

Elliot, Jane (1727–1805) 160

Fletcher, John (1579–1625) 117

Gay, John (1685?–1732) 165
Goldsmith, Oliver (1728–1774) 172
Graham, Robert (1735–1797) 169
Gray, Thomas (1716–1771) 148, 152, 155, 173, 182, 188, 201, 205
Greene, Robert (1558–1592) 50

Habington, William (1605–1654) 141
Herbert, George (1593–1633) 91
Herrick, Robert (1591–1674) 102, 104, 107, 109, 111, 125
Heywood, Thomas (d. 1649?) 57
Hood, Thomas (1799–1845) 271, 277, 283

Jonson, Ben (1573–1637) 91, 95, 106

Keats, John (1795–1821) 214, 216, 239, 241, 246, 275, 298, 301, 312, 330, 353, 361

Lamb, Charles (1775–1834) 268, 280, 286
Lamb, Mary (1764–1847) 288
Lindsay, Anne (1750–1825) 195
Lodge, Thomas (1558?–1625) 26, 56
Logan, John (1748–1788) 161
Lovelace, Richard (1618–1658) 102, 113, 114
Lyly, John (1553–1606) 57
Lyte, Henry Francis (1793–1847) 228, 284

Marlowe, Christopher (1564–1593) 18
Marvell, Andrew (1621–1678) 78, 99, 126, 127, 139
Mickle, William Julius (1735–1788) 197
Milton, John (1608–1674) 69, 78, 82, 89, 90, 93, 94, 103, 130, 134, 140
Moore, Thomas (1779–1852) 234, 247, 263, 269, 272
Munday, Anthony (1553–1633) The Shepherd Tonie 27

Nairne, Caroline Oliphant, Baroness (1766–1845) 201
Nash, Thomas (1567–1600?) 15
Norris, John (1657–1711) 142

Philips, Ambrose (1675–1749) 154
Pope, Alexander (1688–1744) 151
Prior, Matthew (1664–1721) 171

Quarles, Francis (1592–1644) 111

Rogers, Samuel (1763–1855) 170, 185

Scott, Sir Walter (1771–1832) ... 220, 232, 234, 240, 242, 244, 250, 276, 282, 285, 291, 325
Sedley, Charles (1639–1701) 100, 112
Shakespeare, William (1564–1616) 15, 16, 17, 18, 21, 23, 24, 25, 29, 31, 33, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 43, 44, 47, 52, 53, 54, 55, 64, 67
Shelley, Percy Bysshe (1792–1822) 222, 225, 233, 236, 243, 250, 273, 292, 301, 308, 320, 321, 325, 327, 341, 346, 350, 361, 362, 368
Shirley, James (1596–1666) 88
Sidney, Sir Philip (1554–1586) 22, 34, 38, 42, 49
Smart, Christopher (1722–1771) 180

Southey, Robert (1774–1843) 261, 274
Spenser, Edmund (1552–1599) 58
Suckling, John (1609–1642) 115
Sylvester, Joshua (1563–1618) 35

Thomson, James (1700–1748) 154, 171

Vaughan, Henry (1622–1695) 92, 124, 143
Verstegan, Richard (c. 1635) Anonymous 119

Waller, Edmund (1606–1687) 105, 110
Webster, John (1580?–1627) 54
Wilmot, John (1647–1680) 101
Wither, George (1588–1667) 116
Wolfe, Charles (1791–1823) 264, 281
Wordsworth, William (1770–1850) 223, 225, 226, 227, 230, 237, 247, 255, 258, 259, 260, 265, 271, 289, 292, 296, 297, 300, 302, 303, 304, 306, 307, 310, 311, 315, 317, 323, 326, 330, 333, 334, 348, 351, 352, 355, 357, 362, 363
Wotton, Henry (1568–1639) 90, 103
Wyat, Thomas (1503–1542) 32, 40

Anonymous, 19, 28, 33, 34, 36, 45, 46, 48, 56, 98, 105, 106, 110, 112, 118, 119, 120, 121, 163, 199

INDEX OF TITLES

(References are to pages)

Absence..... 23
Absence..... 199
A Ditty..... 34
Admonition to a Traveler..... 303
Adversity, Hymn to..... 205
Advice to a Girl..... 30
Advice to a Lover..... 46
Affliction of Margaret, The..... 289
After Blenheim..... 261
Agnes..... 284
A Land Dirge..... 54
Alexander's Feast..... 143
All for Love..... 219
Althea from Prison, To..... 113
Anthea, To..... 111
At a Solemn Music..... 140
At the mid hour of night..... 247
Auld Robin Gray..... 195
Aurora, To..... 32
Autumn, Ode to..... 312

Bard, The..... 155
Basia..... 30
Battle of the Baltic..... 253
Beech Tree's Petition, The..... 302
Black-Eyed Susan..... 165
Blind Boy, The..... 152
Blind Love..... 44
Blossoms, To..... 125
Blow, blow, thou winter wind..... 47
Bonnie Lesley..... 192
Braes of Yarrow, The..... 161
Bridge of Sighs, The..... 277
Bright Star..... 246
Burial of Sir John Moore, The..... 264
By the Sea..... 323

Care-charmer Sleep..... 41
Carpe Diem..... 35
Castaway, The..... 210
Castle of Chillon, On the..... 257
Celia, To..... 106
Character of a Happy Life..... 90
Charlotte Pulteney, To..... 154
Cherry-Ripe..... 106
Child and Maiden..... 100
Colin..... 27
Composed at Neidpath Castle..... 302
Consolation, A..... 24
Constancy..... 101
Corinna's Maying..... 107
Coronach..... 282
Counsel to Girls..... 102
Cradle Song, A..... 181
Cuckoo, To the..... 297
Cupid and Campaspé..... 57
Cyriack Skinner, To..... 94

Daffodils, The..... 310
Daffodils, To..... 125
Daisy, To the..... 311
Darkness, Hymn to..... 142
Datur Hora Quieti..... 325
Death Bed, The..... 283
Death of Mr. William Hervey, On the..... 122
Death the Leveler..... 88
Desideria..... 247
Diana, Hymn to..... 95
Dianeme, To..... 104
Dilemma, A..... 56
Dirge, A..... 361
Dirge of Love..... 52
Distant Friend, To a..... 237
Distant Prospect of Eton College, Ode on a..... 201
Doth then the world go thus?..... 66
Dream of the Unknown, A..... 327
Duncan Gray..... 196
Duty, Ode to..... 255

Earl March look'd on his dying child 245
Echoes..... 234
Education of Nature, The..... 220

Elegy..... 280
Elegy on Thyrza..... 248
Elegy written in a Country Churchyard..... 188
Elizabeth of Bohemia..... 103
Encouragements to a Lover..... 115
England and Switzerland, 1802.... 258
Evening, Ode to..... 186
Evening Star, To the..... 235
Extinction of the Venetian Republic, On the..... 258

Fair Helen..... 120
Fairy Life, The, 1..... 15
Fairy Life, The, 2..... 16
Farewell!..... 39
Farewell, A..... 168
Favorite Cat, On a..... 152
Fidele..... 53
Flight of Love, The..... 243
Flowers of the Forest (Flodden).... 160
Forever, Fortune, wilt thou prove... 171
Forsaken..... 118
Fortunati Nimium..... 129
Fountain, The..... 357
Friends in Paradise..... 124

Gathering Song of Donald the Black 250
Gifts of God, The..... 91
Girl describes her Fawn, The..... 126
Give my Love good-morrow..... 57
Glen-Almain, the Narrow Glen.... 351
Go, lovely Rose..... 105
Great Adventurer, The..... 98
Grecian Urn, Ode on a..... 353
Green Linnet, The..... 296

Happy Heart, The..... 63
Happy Insensibility..... 239
Hester..... 280
Highland Girl of Inversneyde, To the..... 304
Highland Mary..... 194
His Love, To (2 poems)..... 29
Hohenlinden..... 260
Honest Autolycus, An..... 36
Horatian Ode upon Cromwell's Return from Ireland..... 78
Human Seasons, The..... 361
Hunting Song..... 291

Hymn in Praise of Neptune, A..... 9

If doughty deeds my lady please... 16
I fear thy kisses, gentle maiden.... 22
Il Penseroso..... 13
Indian Serenade, The..... 22
Infant dying as soon as born, On an 28
Infant Joy..... 18
In Imagine Pertransit Homo..... 4
In Lacrimas..... 3
In Memoriam..... 28
Inner Vision, The..... 33
Intimations of Immortality, Ode on..... 36
Invitation, The..... 32
I travel'd among unknown men.... 22
It was a lover and his lass..... 2

Jean..... 19
Jock of Hazeldean..... 2
John Anderson..... 2
Journey onwards, The..... 2

Kubla Khan..... 3

La Belle Dame sans Merci..... 2
Lady Margaret Ley, To the..... 1
Lady, with a Guitar, To a..... 3
L'Allegro..... 1
Lament, A.....
Lament for Culloden..... 1
Land o' the Leal, The..... 2
Last Conqueror, The.....
Lesson, A..... 2
Lessons of Nature, The.....
Life, To..... 2
Light of other Days, The..... 2
London, 1802..... 2
Lord Ullin's Daughter..... 2
Loss of the Royal George..... 1
Lost Love, A..... 2
Love (Genevieve)..... 2
Love in thy youth, fair Maid..... 1
Love me not for comely grace..... 1
Lover's Appeal, The.....
Love's Farewell.....
Love's Insight.....
Love's Omnipresence.....
Love's Perjuries.....
Love's Philosophy.....

Love's Secret 172
Lucasta, going beyond the Seas, To 114
Lucasta, on going to the Wars, To . 102
Lucy Gray 230
Lute, To his 52
Lycidas 82

Madrigal, A 20
Maid of Neidpath, The 244
Manly Heart, The 116
Man of life upright, The 65
Mary Morison 192
Mary, To 281
Mary Unwin, To 208
Melancholy 117
Memory 37
Mermaid Tavern, The 275
Moon, The 49
Moon, To the 325
Morning of Christ's Nativity, Ode on the 69
Mouse, To a 184
Merchant, to secure his treasure, The 171
Mr. Lawrence, To 93
Muses, To the 214
Music, when soft voices die 368
My heart leaps up 362
My Love in her attire 110
Mystical Ecstasy, A 111

Nature and the Poet 348
Nightingale, Ode to a 298
Nightingale, The 41
Nightingale, The 42
Night, To the 236
Noble Nature, The 91
Not, Celia, that I juster am 112
Nox Nocti Indicat Scientiam 141

O Crudelis Amor 50
Ode written in 1746 159
Old Familiar Faces, The 268
Omnia Vincit 19
O my Luve's like a red, red rose ... 193
On a girdle 110
One who has been long in city pent, To 301
One word is too often profaned 250
On first looking into Chapman's Homer 216
On his Blindness 90
On the late Massacre in Piedmont .. 78
On the Tombs in Westminster Abbey 87
Outlaw, The 220
Ozymandias of Egypt 301

Pack, clouds, away 57
Passionate Shepherd to his Love, The 18
Past and Present 271
Picture, A 28
Picture of Little T. C., The 99
Pleasure arising from Vicissitude, Ode on the 148
Poetry of Dress, The, 1 109
Poetry of Dress, The, 2 109
Poet's Dream, The 350
Poets, Ode on the 214
Poplar Field, The 183
Post Mortem 54
Present in Absence 22
Progress of Poesy, The 173
Pro Patria Mori 263
Prothalamion 58

Realm of Fancy, The 330
Reaper, The 306
Recollection, The 321
Renunciation, A 47
Retreat, The 92
Reverie of Poor Susan, The 307
Revolutions 38
River of Life, The 360
Rosabelle 285
Rosaline 26
Rosalynd's Madrigal 56
Rover, The 242
Rule Britannia 154
Ruth, or the Influences of Nature .. 334

Sailor's Wife, The 197
Saint John Baptist 68
Sally in our Alley 167
Scholar, The 274
Sea Dirge, A 53
Sephestia's Song to her Child 50
Serenade, A 234
She dwelt among the untrodden ways 225

She is not fair to outward view.... 224
She walks in Beauty, like the night. 223
She was a Phantom of delight..... 223
Shrubbery, The..... 204
Sic Transit..... 64
Simon Lee..... 265
Simplicity, Ode to..... 149
Skylark, To a..... 292
Skylark, To the..... 292
Sleep..... 38
Sleep, angry beauty, sleep..... 45
Sleeping Beauty, A..... 170
Steep, To..... 326
Slumber did my spirit steal, A..... 227
Soldier's Dream, The..... 326
Solitude..... 151
Solitude of Alexander Selkirk, The. 206
Song for Music, A..... 28
Song for St. Cecilia's Day..... 76
Song of David, The..... 180
Song of the Emigrants in Bermuda. 139
Song to the Evening Star..... 324
Soul and Body..... 64
Spring..... 15
Spring, Ode on the..... 182
Stanzas written in Dejection near Naples..... 273
Summons to Love..... 16
Supplication, A..... 32
Supplication, A..... 115
Sweet Lullaby, A..... 48

Terror of Death, The..... 246
That time of year..... 37
The Life without Passion..... 39
The Passions..... 177
The Pride of Youth..... 276
There be none of Beauty's daughters..... 222
Time and Love, 1..... 17
Time and Love, 2..... 18
This Life, which seems so fair..... 64
Thoughts in a Garden..... 127
Threnos..... 362
To me, fair friend..... 25
To-morrow..... 212
Triumph of Death, The..... 55
Trosachs, The..... 362
True Beauty, The..... 104
True Love..... 33
Twa Corbies, The..... 121
Two April Mornings, The..... 355

Unchangeable, The..... 25
Under the greenwood tree..... 21
Unfaithful Shepherdess, The..... 45
Upon my lap my sovereign sits.... 119
Upon Westminster Bridge..... 300

Via Amoris..... 22
Vision, A..... 143

Westminster Abbey, On the Tombs in 87
West Wind, Ode to the..... 340
Wet Sheet and a flowing sea, A.... 251
When I have borne in memory..... 260
When lovely woman stoops to folly. 172
When the Assault was intended to the City..... 89
When we two parted..... 238
Where shall the lover rest?..... 240
Willy drowned in Yarrow..... 163
Winter..... 36
Winter, Ode to..... 313
Wish, A..... 67
Wish, A..... 185
Wishes for the Supposed Mistress.. 96
Within King's College Chapel, Cambridge..... 352
World is too much with us, The.... 351
World's Way, The..... 67
Written among the Euganean Hills. 341
Written in Early Spring..... 333

Yarrow Unvisited, 1803..... 315
Yarrow Visited, 1814..... 317
Ye banks and braes o' bonnie Doon 172
Ye Mariners of England..... 252
Young Lady, To a..... 170
Young Love..... 53
Youth and Age..... 270
Youth and Age..... 354

INDEX OF FIRST LINES

(References are to pages)

A Chieftain to the Highlands bound 228
A child's a plaything for an hour 288
A flock of sheep that leisurely pass by 326
A slumber did my spirit seal 227
A sweet disorder in the dress 109
A weary lot is thine, fair maid 242
A wet sheet and a flowing sea 251
Absence, hear thou this protestation 22
Ah, Chloris! could I now but sit 100
Ah, County Guy, the hour is nigh 234
All in the Downs the fleet was moor'd 165
All thoughts, all passions, all delights 216
And are ye sure the news is true 197
And is this — Yarrow? — This the Stream 317
And thou art dead, as young and fair 248
And wilt thou leave me thus 40
Ariel to Miranda: — Take 308
Art thou pale for weariness 325
Art thou poor, yet hast thou golden slumbers 63
As it fell upon a day 41
As I was walking all alane 121
As slow our ship her foamy track 269
At the corner of Wood Street, when daylight appears 307
At the mid hour of night, when stars are weeping, I fly 247
Avenge, O Lord! Thy slaughter'd saints, whose bones 78
Awake, Æolian lyre, awake 173
Awake, awake, my Lyre 115

Bards of Passion and of Mirth 214
Beauty sat bathing by a spring 27
Behold her, single in the field 306
Being your slave, what should I do but tend 23
Beneath these fruit-tree boughs that shed 296
Best and brightest, come away 320
Bid me to live, and I will live 111
Blest pair of Sirens, pledges of Heaven's joy 140
Blow, blow, thou winter wind 47
Bright Star! would I were steadfast as thou art 246

Call for the robin-redbreast and the wren 54
Calm was the day, and through the trembling air 58
Captain, or Colonel, or Knight in Arms 89

Care-charmer Sleep, son of the Sable Night 41
Come away, come away, Death 52
Come, cheerful day, part of my life to me 84
Come little babe, come silly soul 48
Come live with me and be my Love 18
Come, Sleep: O Sleep! the certain knot of peace 38
Come unto these yellow sands 16
Crabbed Age and Youth 20
Cupid and my Campaspé play'd 57
Cyriack, whose grandsire, on the royal bench 94

Daughter of Jove, relentless power 205
Daughter to that good Earl, once President 103
Degenerate Douglas! oh, the unworthy lord 302
Doth then the world go thus, doth all thus move 66
Down in yon garden sweet and gay 163
Drink to me only with thine eyes 106
Duncan Gray cam here to woo 196

Earl March look'd on his dying child 245
Earth has not anything to show more fair 300
E'en like two little bank-dividing brooks 111
Eternal Spirit of the chainless Mind 257
Ethereal minstrel! pilgrim of the sky 292
Ever let the Fancy roam 330

Fain would I change that note 19
Fair Daffodils, we weep to see 125
Fair pledges of a fruitful tree 125
Farewell! thou art too dear for my possessing 39
Fear no more the heat o' the sun 53
Fine knacks for ladies, cheap, choice, brave and new 36
Follow thy fair sun, unhappy shadow 44
For ever, Fortune, wilt thou prove 171
Forget not yet the tried intent 32
Four Seasons fill the measure of the year 361
From Harmony, from heavenly Harmony 76
From Stirling Castle we had seen 315
Full fathom five thy father lies 53

Gather ye rose-buds while ye may 102
Gem of the crimson-colour'd Even 235
Get up, get up, for shame! The blooming morn 107
Go fetch to me a pint o' wine 168
Go, lovely Rose 105

Hail thou most sacred venerable thing 142
Hail to thee, blithe Spirit 292
Happy the man, whose wish and care 151
Happy those early days, when I 92

Happy were he could finish forth his fate 67
He that loves a rosy cheek 104
He is gone on the mountain 282
Hence, all you vain delights 117
Hence, loathéd Melancholy 130
Hence, vain deluding Joys 134
He sang of God, the mighty source 180
High-way, since you my chief Parnassus be 22
How happy is he born and taught 90
How like a winter hath my absence been 23
How sleep the brave who sink to rest 159
How sweet the answer Echo makes 234
How vainly men themselves amaze 127

I am monarch of all I survey 206
I arise from dreams of Thee 222
I cannot change, as others do 101
I dream'd that as I wander'd by the way 327
I fear thy kisses, gentle maiden 225
I have had playmates, I have had companions 268
I have no name 181
I heard a thousand blended notes 333
I meet thy pensive, moonlight face 228
I met a traveller from an antique land 301
I remember, I remember 271
I saw Eternity the other night 143
I saw her in childhood 284
I saw my lady weep 33
I saw where in the shroud did lurk 286
I travel'd among unknown men 225
I wander'd lonely as a cloud 310
I was thy neighbour once, thou rugged Pile 348
I wish I were where Helen lies 120
If aught of oaten stop or pastoral song 186
If doughty deeds my lady please 169
If I had thought thou couldst have died 281
If Thou survive my well-contented day 54
If to be absent were to be 114
I'm wearing awa', Jean 201
In a drear-nighted December 239
In the downhill of life, when I find I'm declining 212
In the sweet shire of Cardigan 265
In this still place, remote from men 351
In Xanadu did Kubla Khan 328
It is a beauteous evening, calm and free 323
It is not growing like a tree 91
It was a dismal and a fearful night 122
It was a lover and his lass 21
It was a summer evening 261
I've heard them lilting at our ewe-milking 160

Jack and Joan, they think no ill 129
John Anderson my jo, John 200

Lady, when I behold the roses sprouting 56
Lawrence, of virtuous father virtuous son 93
Let me not to the marriage of true minds 33
Life! I know not what thou art 213
Like as the waves make towards the pebbled shore 38
Like to the clear in highest sphere 26
Love in my bosom, like a bee 56
Love in thy youth, fair Maid, be wise 105
Love not me for comely grace 112
Lo! where the rosy-bosom'd Hours 182

Many a green isle needs must be 341
Mary! I want a lyre with other strings 208
Milton! thou shouldst be living at this hour 259
Mine be a cot beside the hill 185
Mortality, behold and fear 87
Most sweet it is with unuplifted eyes 330
Much have I travel'd in the realms of gold 216
Music, when soft voices die 368
My days among the Dead are past 274
My heart aches, and a drowsy numbness pains 298
My heart leaps up when I behold 362
My Love in her attire doth shew her wit 110
My lute, be as thou were when thou didst grow 52
My thoughts hold mortal strife 51
My true-love hath my heart, and I have his 34

Never love unless you can 30
Never seek to tell thy love 172
No longer mourn for me when I am dead 55
Not a drum was heard, not a funeral note 264
Not, Celia, that I juster am 112
Now the golden Morn aloft 148
Now the last day of many days 321

O blithe new-comer! I have heard 297
O Brignall banks are wild and fair 220
O Friend! I know not which way I must look 259
O happy shades! to me unblest 204
O if thou knew'st how thou thyself dost harm 32
O leave this barren spot to me 302
O listen, listen, ladies gay 285
O lovers' eyes are sharp to see 244
O Mary, at thy window be 192
O me! what eyes hath love put in my head 44
O Mistress mine, where are you roaming 35
O my Luve's like a red, red rose 293

O never say that I was false of heart 25
O saw ye bonnie Lesley 102
O say what is that thing call'd Light 152
O talk not to me of a name great in story 219
O Thou, by Nature taught 149
O waly waly up the bank 118
O what can ail thee, knight-at-arms 241
O wild West Wind, thou breath of Autumn's being 346
O World! O Life! O Time 362
Obscurest night involved the sky 210
Of all the girls that are so smart 167
Of a' the airts the wind can blaw 199
Of Nelson and the North 253
Of Neptune's empire let us sing 94
Of this fair volume which we World do name 66
Oft I had heard of Lucy Gray 230
Oft in the stilly night 272
Oh snatch'd away in beauty's bloom 280
On a day, alack the day 31
On a Poet's lips I slept 350
Once did She hold the gorgeous East in fee 258
One more Unfortunate 277
One word is too often profaned 250
On Linden, when the sun was low 260
Our bugles sang truce, for the night-cloud had lower'd 326
Over the mountains 98

Pack, clouds, away, and welcome day 57
Phoebus, arise 16
Pibroch of Donuil Dhu 250
Poor Soul, the center of my sinful earth 64
Proud Maisie is in the wood 276

Queen and Huntress, chaste and fair 95

Rough Wind, that moanest loud 361
Ruin seize thee, ruthless King 155

Season of mist and mellow fruitfulness 312
See with what simplicity 99
Shall I compare thee to a summer's day 29
Shall I, wasting in despair 116
She dwelt among the untrodden ways 225
She is not fair to outward view 224
She walks in beauty, like the night 223
She was a Phantom of delight 223
Since brass, nor stone, nor earth, nor boundless sea 18
Since there's no help, come let us kiss and part 43
Sleep, angry beauty, sleep and fear not me 45
Sleep on, and dream of Heaven awhile 170

Sleep, sleep, beauty bright 181
Souls of Poets dead and gone 275
Spring, the sweet Spring, is the year's pleasant king 15
Star that bringest home the [illegible] 324
Stern Daughter of the Voic[illegible] God 2, 5
Surprised by joy — impatie[illegible]s the wind 247
Sweet, be not proud of thos[illegible]o eyes 104
Sweet Highland Girl, a very shower 304
Sweet Love, if thou wilt gain a monarch's glory 28
Sweet stream, that winds through yonder glade 170
Swiftly walk over the western wave 236

Take, O take those lips away 43
Tax not the royal Saint with vain expense 352
Tell me not, Sweet, I am unkind 102
Tell me where is Fancy bred 55
That time of year thou may'st in me behold 37
That which her slender waist confined 110
The curfew tolls the knell of parting day 188
The forward youth that would appear 78
The fountains mingle with the river 233
The glories of our blood and state 88
The last and greatest Herald of Heaven's King 68
The lovely lass o' Inverness 160
The man of life upright 65
The merchant, to secure his treasure 171
The more we live, more brief appear 360
The nightingale, as soon as April bringeth 42
The poplars are fell'd; farewell to the shade 183
There be none of Beauty's daughters 222
There is a flower, the lesser Celandine 271
There is a garden in her face 106
There's not a joy the world can give like that it takes away 270
There's not a nook within this solemn Pass 362
There was a time when meadow, grove, and stream 363
The sea hath many thousand sands 46
The sun is warm, the sky is clear 273
The sun upon the lake is low 325
The twentieth year is well-nigh past 208
The world is too much with us; late and soon 351
They are all gone into the world of light 124
They that have power to hurt, and will do none 39
This is the month, and this the happy morn 69
This Life, which seems so fair 64
Though others may her brow adore 34
Thou art not fair, for all thy red and white 47
Thou still unravish'd bride of quietness 353
Three years she grew in sun and shower 226
Thy braes were bonny, Yarrow stream 161
Timely blossom, Infant fair 154

Fired with all these, for restful death I cry 67
Toll for the Brave 164
o me, fair Friend, you never can be old 25
o one who has been ' g in city pent 301
Turn back, you wanton flyer 30
Twas at the royal feast for Persia won 143
Twas on a lofty vase's side 152
Two voices are there; one is of the Sea 258
Under the greenwood tree 21
Upon my lap my sovereign sits 119

Verse, a breeze 'mid blossoms straying 354
Victorious men of earth, no more 88

Waken, lords and ladies gay 291
Wee, sleekit, cow'rin', tim'rous beastie 184
Weep not, my wanton, smile upon my knee 50
Weep you no more, sad fountains 28
Were I as base as is the lowly plain 35
We talk'd with open heart, and tongue 357
We walk'd along, while bright and red 355
We watch'd her breathing thro' the night 283
When as in silks my Julia goes 109
When Britain first at Heaven's command 154
When first the fiery-mantled Sun 313
When God at first made Man 91
When he who adores thee has left but the name 263
When icicles hang by the wall 36
When I consider how my light is spent 90
When I have borne in memory what has tamed 260
When I have fears that I may cease to be 246
When I have seen by Time's fell hand defaced 17
When I survey the bright 141
When I think on the happy days 199
When in disgrace with fortune and men's eyes 24
When in the chronicle of wasted time 29
When lovely woman stoops to folly 172
When Love with unconfinéd wings 113
When maidens such as Hester die 280
When Music, heavenly maid, was young 177
When Ruth was left half desolate 334
When the lamp is shatter'd 243
When the sheep are in the fauld, and the kye at hame 195
When thou must home to shades of underground 50
When to the sessions of sweet silent thought 37
When we two parted 238
Where art thou, my beloved Son 289
Where shall the lover rest 240
Where the bee sucks, there suck I 15
Where the remote Bermudas ride 139

Whether on Ida's shady brow
While that the sun with his beams hot
Whoe'er she be
Why art thou silent? Is thy love a plant
Why so pale and wan, fond lover
Why weep ye by the tide, ladie
With how sad steps, O Moon, thou climb'st the skies
With little here to do or see
With sweetest milk and sugar first

Ye banks and braes and streams around
Ye banks and braes o' bonnie Doon
Ye distant spires, ye antique towers
Ye Mariners of England
Yes, there is holy pleasure in thine eye
Yet once more, O ye laurels, and once more
You meaner beauties of the night